HEDDA GABLER

INTRODUCTION *

it this name was to indicate that Hedda, as a personality, is to be regarded rather as her father’s daughter than as her husband’s wife. It was not my desire to deal in this play with so-called problems. What I principally wanted to do was to depict human beings, human emotions, and human destinies, upon a groundwork of certain of the social conditions and principles of the present day.”

So far we read the history of the play in the official “Correspondence.” Some interesting glimpses into the poet’s moods during the period between the completion of The Lady from the Sea and the publication of Hedda Gabler are to be found in the series of letters to Fräulein Emilie Bardach, of Vienna, published by Dr. George Brandes. This young lady Ibsen met at Gossensass in the Tyrol in the autumn of 1889. The record of their brief friendship belongs to the history of The Master Builder rather than to that of Hedda Gabler, but the allusions to his work in his letters to her during the winter of 1889 demand some examination.

So early as October 7, 1889, he writes to her: “A new poem begins to dawn in me. I will execute it this winter, and try to transfer to it the bright atmosphere of the summer. But I feel that it will end in sadness—such is my nature.” Was this “dawning” poem Hedda Gabler? Or was it rather The Master Builder that was germinating in his mind? Who shall say? The latter hypothesis seems the more probable, for it is hard to believe that at any stage in the incubation of Hedda Gabler he can have conceived it as even beginning in a key of gaiety.

1 Letters 214, 216, 217, 219.
2 In the Ibsen volume of Die Literatur (Berlin).
A week later, however, he appears to have made up his mind that the time had not come for the poetic utilisation of his recent experiences. He writes on October 15: "Here I sit as usual at my writing-table. Now I would fain work, but am unable to. My fancy, indeed, is very active. But it always wanders away. It wanders where it has no business to wander during working hours. I cannot suppress my summer memories—nor do I wish to. I live through my experiences again and again and yet again. To transmute it all into a poem, I find, in the meantime, impossible." Clearly, then, he felt that his imagination ought to have been engaged on some theme having no relation to his summer experiences—the theme, no doubt, of Hedda Gabler. In his next letter, dated October 29, he writes: "Do not be troubled because I cannot, in the meantime, create (dichten). In reality I am for ever creating, or, at any rate, dreaming of something which, when in the fulness of time it ripens, will reveal itself as a creation (Dichtung)." On November 19 he says: "I am very busily occupied with preparations for my new poem. I sit almost the whole day at my writing-table. Go out only in the evening for a little while." The five following letters contain no allusion to the play; but on September 18, 1890, he wrote: "My wife and son are at present at Riva, on the Lake of Garda, and will probably remain there until the middle of October, or even longer. Thus I am quite alone here, and cannot get away. The new play on which I am at present engaged will probably not be ready until November, though I sit at my writing-table daily, and almost the whole day long."

Here ends the history of Hedda Gabler, so far as the poet’s letters carry us. Its hard, clear outlines, and perhaps somewhat bleak atmosphere, seem to have resulted from a sort of reaction against the sentimental “dreamery” begotten of his Gossensass experiences. He sought refuge in the chill materialism of Hedda from the ardent transcendentalistm of Hilda, whom he already heard knocking at the door. He was not yet in the mood to deal with her on the plane of poetry.¹

The Literary Remains contain some interesting jottings in preparation for Hedda Gabler, as well as pretty full drafts of several scenes in the play. The first note runs thus:

The pale, seemingly cold beauty. Great demands upon life and upon the joy of life.

He, who has now at last conquered her, is insignificant in person, but an honorable and gifted, liberal-minded man of science.

Then come brief scraps of hastily-scribbled dialogue; and then:

N. B.!

Brack had always thought that Hedda’s short engagement to Tesman would be broken off.

Hedda talks of how she felt herself set aside, step by step, when her father had fallen out of favour, retired [from the army] and died leaving no property.—She then felt, and felt bitterly, as if it had been for his sake that

¹Dr. Julius Elias (Neue deutsche Rundschau, December 1906, p. 1462) makes the curious assertion that the character of Thea Elvsted was in part borrowed from this “Gossensasser Hildetypus.” It is hard to see how even Ibsen’s ingenuity could distil from the same flower two such different essences as Thea and Hilda.
INTRODUCTION

She had been fêted.—And she was already between 25 and 26. On the point of going downhill unmarried.

She thinks that Tesman in reality feels only a vain exultation at having won her. His care for her is like that which one expends upon a fine riding-horse, or a valuable sporting dog.—She does not, however, feel indignant at this. She regards it simply as a fact.

Hedda says to Brack that she does not think one can call Tesman ridiculous. But in reality she does find him so. And later she also finds him pitiful.

TESMAN. Could you not call me by my Christian name?

HEDDA. No, indeed, I can’t—unless you had a different name from the one they have given you.

Tesman takes possession of Lövborg’s manuscript, in order that it may not be lost. It is Hedda who afterwards, as if by a passing remark, intended to test him, suggests to him the idea of keeping it.

Then he reads it. A new train of thought is set up within him. But the situation becomes more tense. Hedda awakens his jealousy.

In the third act there comes one piece of news after another as to Lövborg’s exploits during the night. At last he himself arrives, in quiet despair. “Where is the manuscript?” “Did I not leave it behind me here?” He knows that he did not. And, in any case, what use would the manuscript be to him now! He to write of “the ethics of the future”! He, who has just got out of the police cells!

Hedda’s despair lies in the idea that there are surely so many possibilities of happiness in the world, but that she cannot discover them. It is the lack of an object in life that tortures her.

When Hedda tempts T. to lead E. L. to ruin, it is to test T.'s character.

It is in Hedda's neighbourhood that the irresistible craving for dissipation always comes over E. L.

Tesman cannot understand that E. L. should be willing to build his future on wrong done to another.

Amid these jottings, too, we find a scrap of dialogue between Hedda and Brack, in which she says: "Remember that I am an old man's child—and more than that, the child of a man who had lived his life. Perhaps that has left its mark on me." Brack replies: "I really believe you have begun to brood over problems"; and she rejoins: "What depths may one not fall to when one has gone and got married?"

From the more detailed drafts it would appear that, in the poet's original conception, Tesman was to be much more of an active intermediary between Hedda and Lövborg than he became in the end. It was Tesman who, at her instigation, was to lure Lövborg to Brack's orgie; and it was apparently Tesman who was actually to make away with or misappropriate Lövborg's manuscript. Both Tesman and Mrs. Elvsted were to have known much more of the former "comradeship" between Lövborg and Hedda than they do in the finished play. There is no hint of any "Mademoiselle Diana" in the draft; when Hedda asks Mrs. Elvsted who the woman is whom Lövborg cannot forget, she replies point-blank, "It is yourself, Hedda." Mrs. Elvsted's luxuriant hair, Hedda's jealousy of it, and threat to "burn it off her head," are afterthoughts; so is the famous conception of Lövborg "with the vine-leaves in his hair." A curious touch, which I am at a loss to explain, occurs in the stage-direction for Hedda's burning of Lövborg's manuscript. It runs thus:—"She goes to the writing-table, takes out the manuscript, seats herself in the arm-chair beside the stove; opens the packet, sorts out the white leaves from the blue, puts the white back in the cover again, and keeps the blue in her lap." Then she opens the stove door and gradually burns the blue leaves, with words very much like those of the final text. What the white leaves can have been I do not know; they must have belonged to some phase in the working-out of the play which has otherwise disappeared.

_Hedda Gabler_ was published in Copenhagen on December 16, 1890. This was the first of Ibsen's plays to be translated from proof-sheets and published in England and America almost simultaneously with its first appearance in Scandinavia. The earliest theatrical performance took place at the Residenz Theater, Munich, on the last day of January 1891, in the presence of the poet, Frau Conrad-Ramlo playing the title-part. The Lessing Theater, Berlin, followed suit on February 10. Not till February 25 was the play seen in Copenhagen, with Fru Hennings as Hedda. On the following night it was given for the first time in Christiania, the Norwegian Hedda being Froken Constance Bruun. It was this production which the poet saw when he visited the Christiania Theater for the first time after his return to Norway, August 28, 1891. It would take pages to give even the baldest list of the productions and revivals of Hedda Gabler in Scandinavia and Germany, where it has always ranked among Ibsen's most popular works. The admirable production of the play by Miss Elizabeth Robins and Miss Marion Lea, at the Vaudeville Theatre, London, April 20, 1891, may rank as the second great step towards the popularisation of Ibsen in England, the first being the Charrington-Achurch production of A Doll's House in 1889. Miss Robins afterwards repeated her fine performance of Hedda many times, in London, in the English provinces, and in New York. The character has also been acted in London by Eleonora Duse, and by Mrs. Patrick Campbell. In America Hedda has been acted with great success by Mrs. Fiske and by Madame Nazimova; in Australia, by Miss Nance O'Neill. The first French Hedda Gabler was Mlle. Marthe Brandès, who played the part at the Vaudeville Theatre, Paris, on December 17, 1891, the performance being introduced by a lecture by M. Jules Lemaitre. In Holland, in Italy, in Russia, the play has been acted times without number. In short (as might easily have been foretold) it has rivalled A Doll's House in world-wide popularity.

It has been suggested,¹ I think without sufficient ground, that Ibsen deliberately conceived Hedda Gabler as an "international" play, and that the scene is really the "west end" of any great European city. To me it seems quite clear that Ibsen had Christiania in mind, and the Christiania of a somewhat earlier period than the 'nineties. The electric cars, telephones, and other conspicuous factors in the life of a modern capital are notably absent from the play. There is no electric light in Secretary Falk’s villa. It is still the habit for ladies to return on foot from evening parties, with gallant swains escorting them. This “suburbanism” which so distressed the London critics of 1891, was characteristic of the Christiania Ibsen himself had known in the ’sixties—the Christiania of Love’s Comedy—rather than of the greatly extended and modernised city of the end of the century. Moreover, Lövborg’s allusions to the fiord, and the suggested picture of Sheriff Elvsted, his family and his avocations, are all distinctively Norwegian. The truth seems to be very simple—the environment and the subsidiary personages are all thoroughly national, but Hedda herself is an “international” type, a product of civilisation by no means peculiar to Norway.

We cannot point to any individual model or models who “sat to” Ibsen for the character of Hedda.\(^1\) The late Grant Allen declared that Hedda was “nothing more nor less than the girl we take down to dinner in London nineteen times out of twenty”; in which case Ibsen must have suffered from a superfluity of models, rather than from any difficulty in finding one. But the fact is that in this, as in all other instances, the word “model” must be taken in a very different sense from that in which it is commonly used in painting. Ibsen undoubtedly used models for this trait and that, but never for a whole figure. If his characters can be called portraits at all, they are composite portraits. Even when it seems pretty clear that the initial impulse towards the creation of a particular character came from some individual, the original figure is entirely transmuted in the process of harmonisation with the dramatic scheme. We need not, therefore, look for a definite prototype of Hedda; but Dr. Brandes shows that two of that lady’s exploits were probably suggested by the anecdotic history of the day.

Ibsen had no doubt heard how the wife of a well-known Norwegian composer, in a fit of raging jealousy excited by her husband’s prolonged absence from home, burnt the manuscript of a symphony which he had just finished. The circumstances under which Hedda burns Lövborg’s manuscript are, of course, entirely different and infinitely more dramatic; but here we have merely another instance of the dramatisation or “poetisation” of the raw material of life. Again, a still more painful incident probably came to his knowledge about the same time. A beautiful and very intellectual woman was married to a well-known man who had been addicted to drink, but had entirely conquered the vice. One day a mad whim seized her to put his self-mastery and her power over him to the test. As it happened to be his birthday, she rolled into his study a small keg of brandy, and then withdrew. She returned some time afterwards to find that he had broached the keg, and lay insensible on the floor. In this anecdote we cannot but recognise the germ, not only of Hedda’s temptation of Lövborg, but of a large part of her character.

For the character of Eilert Lövborg, again, Ibsen seems unquestionably to have borrowed several traits from a definite original. A young Danish man of letters, whom Dr. Brandes calls Holm, was an enthusiastic admirer of Ibsen, and came to be on very friendly terms with him. One day Ibsen was astonished to receive, in Munich, a parcel addressed from Berlin by this young man, containing, without a word of explanation, a packet of his (Ibsen’s) letters, and a photograph which he had presented to Holm. Ibsen brooded and brooded over the incident, and at last came to the conclusion that the young man had intended to return her letters and photograph to a young lady to whom he was known to be attached, and had in a fit of aberration mixed up the two objects of his worship. Some time after, Holm appeared at Ibsen’s rooms. He talked quite rationally, but professed to have no knowledge whatever of the letter-incident, though he admitted the truth of Ibsen’s conjecture that the “belle dame sans merci” had demanded the return of her letters and portrait. Ibsen was determined to get at the root of the mystery; and a little inquiry into his young friend’s habits revealed the fact that he broke his fast on a bottle of port wine, consumed a bottle of Rhine wine at lunch, of Burgundy at dinner, and finished off the evening with one or two more bottles of port. Then he heard, too, how, in the course of a night’s carouse, Holm had lost the manuscript of a book; and in these traits he saw the outline of the figure of Eilert Lövborg.
Some time elapsed, and again Ibsen received a postal packet from Holm. This one contained his will, in which Ibsen figured as his residuary legatee. But many other legatees were mentioned in the instrument—all of them ladies, such as Fräulein Alma Rothbart, of Bremen, and Fräulein Elise Kraushaar, of Berlin. The bequests to these meritorious spinsters were so generous that their sum considerably exceeded the amount of the testator’s property. Ibsen gently but firmly declined the proffered inheritance; but Holm’s will no doubt suggested to him the figure of that red-haired “Mademoiselle Diana,” who is heard of but not seen in Hedda Gabler, and enabled him to add some further traits to the portraiture of Lövborg. When the play appeared, Holm recognised himself with glee in the character of the bibulous man of letters, and thereafter adopted “Eilert Lövborg” as his pseudonym. I do not, therefore, see why Dr. Brandes should suppress his real name; but I willingly imitate him in erring on the side of discretion. The poor fellow died several years ago.

Some critics have been greatly troubled as to the precise meaning of Hedda’s fantastic vision of Lövborg “with vine-leaves in his hair.” Surely this is a very obvious image or symbol of the beautiful, the ideal, aspect of bacchic elation and revelry. Antique art, or I am much mistaken, shows us many figures of Dionysus himself and his followers with vine-leaves entwined in their hair. To Ibsen’s mind, at any rate, the image had long been familiar. In Peer Gynt (Act iv. sc. 8), when Peer, having carried off Anitra, finds himself in a particularly festive mood, he cries: “Were there vine-leaves around, I would garland my brow." Again, in Emperor and Galilean (Pt. ii. Act 1) where Julian, in the procession of Dionysus, impersonates the god himself, it is directed that he shall wear a wreath of vine-leaves. Professor Dietrichson relates that among the young artists whose society Ibsen frequented during his first years in Rome, it was customary, at their little festivals, for the revellers to deck themselves in this fashion. But the image is so obvious that there is no need to trace it to any personal experience. The attempt to place Hedda's vine-leaves among Ibsen's obscurities is an example of the firm resolution not to understand which animated the criticism of the 'nineties.

Dr. Brandes has dealt very severely with the character of Eilert Lövborg, alleging that we cannot believe in the genius attributed to him. But where is he described as a genius? The poet represents him as a very able student of sociology; but that is a quite different thing from attributing to him such genius as must necessarily shine forth in every word he utters. Dr. Brandes, indeed, declines to believe even in his ability as a sociologist, on the ground that it is idle to write about the social development of the future. "To our prosaic minds," he says, "it may seem as if the most sensible utterance on the subject is that of the fool of the play: 'The future! Good heavens, we know nothing of the future.'" The best retort to this criticism is that which Eilert himself makes: "There's a thing or two to be said about it all the same." The intelligent forecasting of the future (as Mr. H. G. Wells has shown) is not only clearly distinguishable from fantastic Utopianism, but is indispensable to any large statesmanship or enlightened social activity. With very real and very great respect for Dr. Brandes, I cannot think that he has been fortunate in his treatment of Lövborg's character. It has been represented as an absurdity that he should think of reading abstracts from his new book to a man like Tesman, whom he despises. But though Tesman is a ninny, he is, as Hedda says, a "specialist"—he is a competent, plodding student of his subject. Lövborg may quite naturally wish to see how his new method, or his excursion into a new field, strikes the average scholar of the Tesman type. He is, in fact, "trying it on the dog"—neither an unreasonable nor an unusual proceeding. There is a certain improbability in the way in which Lövborg is represented as carrying his manuscript around, and especially in Mrs. Elvsted's production of his rough draft from her pocket; but these are mechanical trifles, on which only a niggling criticism would dream of laying stress.

Of all Ibsen's works, Hedda Gabler is the most detached, the most objective—a character-study pure and simple. It is impossible—or so it seems to me—to extract any sort of general idea from it. One cannot even call it a satire, unless one is prepared to apply that term to the record of a "case" in a work on criminology. Reverting to Dumas's dictum that a play should contain "a painting, a judgment, an ideal," we may say that Hedda Gabler fulfils only the first of these requirements. The poet does not even pass judgment on his heroine: he simply paints her full-length portrait with scientific impassivity. But what a portrait! How searching in insight, how brilliant in colouring, how rich in detail! Grant Allen's remark, above quoted, was, of course, a whimsical exaggeration: the Hedda type is not so common as all that, else the world would quickly come to an end. But particular traits and tendencies of the Hedda type are very common in modern life, and not only among women. Hyperesthesia lies at the root of her tragedy. With a keenly critical, relentlessly solvent intelligence, she combines a morbid shrinking from all the gross and prosaic detail of the sensual life. She has nothing to take her out of herself—not a single intellectual interest or moral enthusiasm. She cherishes, in a languid way, a petty social ambition; and even that she finds obstructed and baffled. At the same time she learns that another woman has had the courage to love and venture all, where she, in her cowardice, only hankered and refrained. Her malign egotism rises up uncontrolled, and calls to its aid her quick and subtle intellect. She ruins the other woman’s happiness, but in doing so incurs a danger from which her sense of personal dignity revolts. Life has no such charm for her that she cares to purchase it at the cost of squalid humiliation and self-contempt. The good and the bad in her alike impel her to have done with it all; and a pistol-shot ends what is surely one of the most poignant character-tragedies in literature.\(^1\) Ibsen’s brain never worked at higher pressure than in the conception and adjustment of those “crowded hours” in which Hedda, tangled in the \(^1\) Hedda’s case cannot but recall that stoic maxim of A. E. Housman’s:

If your hand or foot offend you,
Cut it off, lad, and be whole;
But play the man, stand up and end you,
When your sickness is your soul.

It may not be superfluous to note that the “a” in “Gabler” should be sounded long and full, like the “a” in “garden”—not like the “a” in “gable” or in “gabble.”

PLAY IN FOUR ACTS

ACT FIRST

A spacious, handsome, and tastefully furnished drawing-room, decorated in dark colours. In the back, a wide doorway with curtains drawn back, leading into a smaller room decorated in the same style as the drawing-room. In the right-hand wall of the front room, a folding door leading out to the hall. In the opposite wall, on the left, a glass door, also with curtains drawn back. Through the panes can be seen part of a veranda outside, and trees covered with autumn foliage. An oval table, with a cover on it, and surrounded by chairs, stands well forward. In front, by the wall on the right, a wide stove of dark porcelain, a high-backed arm-chair, a cushioned foot-rest, and two footstools. A settee, with a small round table in front of it, fills the upper right-hand corner. In front, on the left, a little way from the wall, a sofa. Further back than the glass door, a piano. On either side of the doorway at the back a whatnot with terra-cotta and majolica ornaments.—Against the back wall of the inner room a sofa, with a table, and one or two chairs. Over the sofa hangs the portrait of a handsome elderly man in a General's uniform. Over the table a hanging lamp, with an opal glass shade.—A number of bouquets are arranged about the drawing-room, in vases and glasses. Others lie upon the tables. The floors in both rooms are covered with thick carpets.—Morning light. The sun shines in through the glass door.

Miss Juliana Tesman, with her bonnet on and carrying a parasol, comes in from the hall, followed by Berta, who carries a bouquet wrapped in paper. Miss Tesman is a comely and pleasant-looking lady of about sixty-five. She is nicely but simply dressed in a grey walking-costume. Berta is a middle-aged woman of plain and rather countrified appearance.

Miss Tesman.

[Stops close to the door, listens, and says softly:] Upon my word, I don't believe they are stirring yet!

Berta.

[Also softly.] I told you so, Miss. Remember how late the steamboat got in last night. And then, when they got home!—good Lord, what a lot the young mistress had to unpack before she could get to bed.

Miss Tesman.

Well well—let them have their sleep out. But let us see that they get a good breath of the fresh morning air when they do appear.

[She goes to the glass door and throws it open.

Berta.

[Beside the table, at a loss what to do with the bouquet in her hand.] I declare there isn't a bit of room left. I think I'll put it down here, Miss.

[She places it on the piano.]
HEDDA GABLER

MISS TESMAN.

So you’ve got a new mistress now, my dear Berta. Heaven knows it was a wrench to me to part with you.

BERTA.

[On the point of weeping.] And do you think it wasn’t hard for me too, Miss? After all the blessed years I’ve been with you and Miss Rina.\(^1\)

MISS TESMAN.

We must make the best of it, Berta. There was nothing else to be done. George can’t do without you, you see—he absolutely can’t. He has had you to look after him ever since he was a little boy.

BERTA.

Ah but, Miss Julia, I can’t help thinking of Miss Rina lying helpless at home there, poor thing. And with only that new girl too! She’ll never learn to take proper care of an invalid.

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, I shall manage to train her. And of course, you know, I shall take most of it upon myself. You needn’t be uneasy about my poor sister, my dear Berta.

BERTA.

Well, but there’s another thing, Miss. I’m so mortally afraid I shan’t be able to suit the young mistress.

\(^1\) Pronounce Reena.
Oh well—just at first there may be one or two things—

BERTA.

Most like she'll be terrible grand in her ways.

MISS TESMAN.

Well, you can't wonder at that—General Gabler's daughter! Think of the sort of life she was accustomed to in her father's time. Don't you remember how we used to see her riding down the road along with the General? In that long black habit—and with feathers in her hat?

BERTA.

Yes indeed—I remember well enough!—But, good Lord, I should never have dreamt in those days that she and Master George would make a match of it.

MISS TESMAN.

Nor I.—But by-the-bye, Berta—while I think of it: in future you mustn't say Master George. You must say Dr. Tesman.

BERTA.

Yes, the young mistress spoke of that too—last night—the moment they set foot in the house. Is it true then, Miss?

MISS TESMAN.

Yes, indeed it is. Only think, Berta—some foreign university has made him a doctor—while he has been abroad, you understand. I hadn’t heard a word about it, until he told me himself upon the pier.

BERTA.

Well well, he’s clever enough for anything, he is. But I didn’t think he’d have gone in for doctoring people too.

MISS TESMAN.

No no, it’s not that sort of doctor he is. [Nods significantly.] But let me tell you, we may have to call him something still grander before long.

BERTA.

You don’t say so! What can that be, Miss?

MISS TESMAN.

[Smiling.] H’m—wouldn’t you like to know! [With emotion.] Ah, dear dear—if my poor brother could only look up from his grave now, and see what his little boy has grown into! [Looks around.] But bless me, Berta—why have you done this? Taken the chintz covers off all the furniture?

BERTA.

The mistress told me to. She can’t abide covers on the chairs, she says.

MISS TESMAN.

Are they going to make this their everyday sitting-room then?
BERTA.

Yes, that's what I understood—from the mistress. Master George—the doctor—he said nothing.

GEORGE TESMAN comes from the right into the inner room, humming to himself, and carrying an unstrapped empty portmanteau. He is a middle-sized, young-looking man of thirty-three, rather stout, with a round, open, cheerful face, fair hair and beard. He wears spectacles, and is somewhat carelessly dressed in comfortable indoor clothes.

MISS TESMAN.

Good morning, good morning, George.

TESMAN.

[In the doorway between the rooms.] Aunt Julia! Dear Aunt Julia! [Goes up to her and shakes hands warmly.] Come all this way—so early! Eh?

MISS TESMAN.

Why, of course I had to come and see how you were getting on.

TESMAN.

In spite of your having had no proper night's rest?

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, that makes no difference to me.

TESMAN.

Well, I suppose you got home all right from the pier? Eh?
HEDDA GABLER

ACT I

Miss Tesman.

Yes, quite safely, thank goodness. Judge Brack was good enough to see me right to my door.

Tesman.

We were so sorry we couldn’t give you a seat in the carriage. But you saw what a pile of boxes Hedda had to bring with her.

Miss Tesman.

Yes, she had certainly plenty of boxes.

Berta.

[To Tesman.] Shall I go in and see if there’s anything I can do for the mistress?

Tesman.

No thank you, Berta—you needn’t. She said she would ring if she wanted anything.

Berta.

[Going towards the right.] Very well.

Tesman.

But look here—take this portmanteau with you.

Berta.

[Taking it.] I’ll put it in the attic.

[She goes out by the hall door.]
TESMAN.

Fancy, Auntie—I had the whole of that portmanteau chock full of copies of documents. You wouldn't believe how much I have picked up from all the archives I have been examining—curious old details that no one has had any idea of——

MISS TESMAN.

Yes, you don't seem to have wasted your time on your wedding trip, George.

TESMAN.

No, that I haven't. But do take off your bonnet, Auntie. Look here! Let me untie the strings—eh?

MISS TESMAN.

[While he does so.] Well well—this is just as if you were still at home with us.

TESMAN.

[With the bonnet in his hand, looks at it from all sides.] Why, what a gorgeous bonnet you've been investing in!

MISS TESMAN.

I bought it on Hedda's account.

TESMAN.

On Hedda's account? Eh?

MISS TESMAN.

Yes, so that Hedda needn't be ashamed of me if we happened to go out together.
[Patting her cheek.] You always think of everything, Aunt Julia. [Lays the bonnet on a chair beside the table.] And now, look here—suppose we sit comfortably on the sofa and have a little chat, till Hedda comes.

[They seat themselves. She places her parasol in the corner of the sofa.]

MISS TESMAN.

[Takes both his hands and looks at him.] What a delight it is to have you again, as large as life, before my very eyes, George! My George—my poor brother’s own boy!

TESMAN.

And it’s a delight for me, too, to see you again, Aunt Julia! You, who have been father and mother in one to me.

MISS TESMAN.

Oh yes, I know you will always keep a place in your heart for your old aunts.

TESMAN.

And what about Aunt Rina? No improvement—eh?

MISS TESMAN.

Oh no—we can scarcely look for any improvement in her case, poor thing. There she lies, helpless, as she has lain for all these years. But heaven grant I may not lose her yet awhile! For if I did, I don’t know what I should make of my life, George—especially now that I haven’t you to look after any more.
TESMAN.

[Patting her back.] There, there, there——!

MISS TESMAN.

[Suddenly changing her tone.] And to think that here are you a married man, George!—And that you should be the one to carry off Hedda Gabler—the beautiful Hedda Gabler! Only think of it—she, that was so beset with admirers!

TESMAN.

[Hums a little and smiles complacently.] Yes, I fancy I have several good friends about town who would like to stand in my shoes—eh?

MISS TESMAN.

And then this fine long wedding-tour you have had! More than five—nearly six months——

TESMAN.

Well, for me it has been a sort of tour of research as well. I have had to do so much grubbing among old records—and to read no end of books too, Auntie.

MISS TESMAN.

Oh yes, I suppose so. [More confidentially, and lowering her voice a little.] But listen now, George,—have you nothing—nothing special to tell me?

TESMAN.

As to our journey?
HEDDA GABLER

ACT I

MISS TESMAN.

Yes.

TESMAN.

No, I don’t know of anything except what I have told you in my letters. I had a doctor’s degree conferred on me— but that I told you yesterday.

MISS TESMAN.

Yes, yes, you did. But what I mean is— haven’t you any— any— expectations —?

TESMAN.

Expectations?

MISS TESMAN.

Why you know, George—I’m your old auntie!

TESMAN.

Why, of course I have expectations.

MISS TESMAN.

Ah!

TESMAN.

I have every expectation of being a professor one of these days.

MISS TESMAN.

Oh yes, a professor——

TESMAN.

Indeed, I may say I am certain of it. But my dear Auntie— you know all about that already!
MISS TESMAN.

[Laughing to herself.] Yes, of course I do. You are quite right there. [Changing the subject.] But we were talking about your journey. It must have cost a great deal of money, George?

TESMAN.

Well, you see—my handsome travelling-scholarship went a good way.

MISS TESMAN.

But I can’t understand how you can have made it go far enough for two.

TESMAN.

No, that’s not so easy to understand—eh?

MISS TESMAN.

And especially travelling with a lady—they tell me that makes it ever so much more expensive.

TESMAN.

Yes, of course—it makes it a little more expensive. But Hedda had to have this trip, Auntie! She really had to. Nothing else would have done.

MISS TESMAN.

No no, I suppose not. A wedding-tour seems to be quite indispensable nowadays.—But tell me now—have you gone thoroughly over the house yet?
Tesman.

Yes, you may be sure I have. I have been afoot ever since daylight.

Miss Tesman.

And what do you think of it all?

Tesman.

I'm delighted! Quite delighted! Only I can't think what we are to do with the two empty rooms between this inner parlour and Hedda's bedroom.

Miss Tesman.

[Laughing.] Oh my dear George, I daresay you may find some use for them—in the course of time.

Tesman.

Why of course you are quite right, Aunt Julia! You mean as my library increases—eh?

Miss Tesman.

Yes, quite so, my dear boy. It was your library I was thinking of.

Tesman.

I am specially pleased on Hedda's account. Often and often, before we were engaged, she said that she would never care to live anywhere but in Secretary Falk's villa.¹

¹ In the original, "Statsrådinde Falks villa"—showing that it had belonged to the widow of a cabinet minister.
MISS TESMAN.

Yes, it was lucky that this very house should come into the market, just after you had started.

TESMAN.

Yes, Aunt Julia, the luck was on our side, wasn't it—eh?

MISS TESMAN.

But the expense, my dear George! You will find it very expensive, all this.

TESMAN.

[Looks at her, a little cast down.] Yes, I suppose I shall, Aunt!

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, frightfully!

TESMAN.

How much do you think? In round numbers?—Eh?

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, I can't even guess until all the accounts come in

TESMAN.

Well, fortunately, Judge Brack has secured the most favourable terms for me,—so he said in a letter to Hedda.

MISS TESMAN.

Yes, don't be uneasy, my dear boy.—Besides, I have given security for the furniture and all the carpets.
ACT I]

HEDDA GABLER

35

TESMAN.

Security? You? My dear Aunt Julia—what sort of security could you give?

MISS TESMAN.

I have given a mortgage on our annuity.

TESMAN.

[Jumps up.] What! On your—and Aunt Rina’s annuity!

MISS TESMAN.

Yes, I knew of no other plan, you see.

TESMAN.

[Placing himself before her.] Have you gone out of your senses, Auntie! Your annuity—it’s all that you and Aunt Rina have to live upon.

MISS TESMAN.

Well well—don’t get so excited about it. It’s only a matter of form you know—Judge Brack assured me of that. It was he that was kind enough to arrange the whole affair for me. A mere matter of form, he said.

TESMAN.

Yes, that may be all very well. But nevertheless——

MISS TESMAN.

You will have your own salary to depend upon now. And, good heavens, even if we did have to pay up a little—! To eke things out a bit at the start—! Why, it would be nothing but a pleasure to us.

Tesman.

Oh Auntie—will you never be tired of making sacrifices for me!

Miss Tesman.

[Rises and lays her hand on his shoulders.] Have I any other happiness in this world except to smooth your way for you, my dear boy? You, who have had neither father nor mother to depend on. And now we have reached the goal, George! Things have looked black enough for us, sometimes; but, thank heaven, now you have nothing to fear.

Tesman.

Yes, it is really marvellous how everything has turned out for the best.

Miss Tesman.

And the people who opposed you—who wanted to bar the way for you—now you have them at your feet. They have fallen, George. Your most dangerous rival—his fall was the worst.—And now he has to lie on the bed he has made for himself—poor misguided creature.

Tesman.

Have you heard anything of Eilert? Since I went away, I mean.

Miss Tesman.

Only that he is said to have published a new book.
Tesman.

What! Eilert Lövborg! Recently—eh?

Miss Tesman.

Yes, so they say. Heaven knows whether it can be worth anything! Ah, when your new book appears—that will be another story, George! What is it to be about?

Tesman.

It will deal with the domestic industries of Brabant during the Middle Ages.

Miss Tesman.

Fancy—to be able to write on such a subject as that!

Tesman.

However, it may be some time before the book is ready. I have all these collections to arrange first, you see.

Miss Tesman.

Yes, collecting and arranging—no one can beat you at that. There you are my poor brother's own son.

Tesman.

I am looking forward eagerly to setting to work at it; especially now that I have my own delightful home to work in.

Miss Tesman.

And, most of all, now that you have got the wife of your heart, my dear George.
[Embracing her.] Oh yes, yes, Aunt Julia, Hedda—she is the best part of it all! [Looks towards the doorway.] I believe I hear her coming—eh?

Hedda enters from the left through the inner room. She is a woman of nine-and-twenty. Her face and figure show refinement and distinction. Her complexion is pale and opaque. Her steel-grey eyes express a cold, unruffled repose. Her hair is of an agreeable medium brown, but not particularly abundant. She is dressed in a tasteful, somewhat loose-fitting morning gown.

Miss Tesman.

[Going to meet Hedda.] Good morning, my dear Hedda! Good morning, and a hearty welcome!

Hedda.

[Holds out her hand.] Good morning, dear Miss Tesman! So early a call! That is kind of you.

Miss Tesman.

[With some embarrassment.] Well—has the bride slept well in her new home?

Hedda.

Oh yes, thanks. Passably.

Tesman.

[Laughing.] Passably! Come, that's good, Hedda! You were sleeping like a stone when I got up.
Hedda.

Fortunately. Of course one has always to accustom one’s self to new surroundings, Miss Tesman—little by little. [Looking towards the left.] Oh—there the servant has gone and opened the veranda door, and let in a whole flood of sunshine!

Miss Tesman.

[Going towards the door.] Well, then we will shut it.

Hedda.

No no, not that! Tesman, please draw the curtains. That will give a softer light.

Tesman.

[At the door.] All right—all right.—There now, Hedda, now you have both shade and fresh air.

Hedda.

Yes, fresh air we certainly must have, with all these stacks of flowers——. But—won’t you sit down, Miss Tesman?

Miss Tesman.

No, thank you. Now that I have seen that everything is all right here—thank heaven!—I must be getting home again. My sister is lying longing for me, poor thing.

Tesman.

Give her my very best love, Auntie; and say I shall look in and see her later in the day.
MISS TESMAN.

Yes, yes, I'll be sure to tell her. But by-the-bye, George—[Feeling in her dress pocket]—I had almost forgotten—I have something for you here.

TESMAN.

What is it, Auntie? Eh?

MISS TESMAN.

[Produces a flat parcel wrapped in newspaper and hands it to him.] Look here, my dear boy.

TESMAN.

[Opening the parcel.] Well, I declare!—Have you really saved them for me, Aunt Julia! Hedda! isn’t this touching—eh?

HEDDA.

[Beside the whatnot on the right.] Well, what is it?

TESMAN.

My old morning-shoes! My slippers.

HEDDA.

Indeed. I remember you often spoke of them while we were abroad.

TESMAN.

Yes, I missed them terribly. [Goes up to her.] Now you shall see them, Hedda!
HEDDA.

[Going towards the stove.] Thanks, I really don’t care about it.

TESMAN.

[Following her.] Only think—ill as she was, Aunt Rina embroidered these for me. Oh you can’t think how many associations cling to them.

HEDDA.

[At the table.] Scarcely for me.

MISS TESMAN.

Of course not for Hedda, George.

TESMAN.

Well, but now that she belongs to the family, I thought——

HEDDA.

[Interrupting.] We shall never get on with this servant, Tesman.

MISS TESMAN.

Not get on with Berta?

TESMAN.

Why, dear, what puts that in your head? Eh?

HEDDA.

[Pointing.] Look there! She has left her old bonnet lying about on a chair.
HEDDA GABLER

ACT I

TESMAN.

[In consternation, drops the slippers on the floor.] Why, Hedda—

HEDDA.

Just fancy, if any one should come in and see it!

TESMAN.

But Hedda—that's Aunt Julia's bonnet.

HEDDA.

Is it!

MISS TESMAN.

[Taking up the bonnet.] Yes, indeed it's mine. And, what's more, it's not old, Madam Hedda.

HEDDA.

I really did not look closely at it, Miss Tesman.

MISS TESMAN.

[Trying on the bonnet.] Let me tell you it's the first time I have worn it—the very first time.

TESMAN.

And a very nice bonnet it is too—quite a beauty!

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, it's no such great things, George. [Looks around her.] My parasol—? Ah, here. [Takes it.] For this is mine too—[mutters]—not Berta's.
ACT I] HEDDA GABLER 43

TESMAN.

A new bonnet and a new parasol! Only think, Hedda!

HEDDA.

Very handsome indeed.

TESMAN.

Yes, isn’t it? Eh? But Auntie, take a good look at Hedda before you go! See how handsome she is!

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, my dear boy, there’s nothing new in that. Hedda was always lovely.

[She nods and goes towards the right.

TESMAN.

[Following.] Yes, but have you noticed what splendid condition she is in? How she has filled out on the journey?

HEDDA.

[Crossing the room.] Oh, do be quiet——!

MISS TESMAN.

[Who has stopped and turned.] Filled out?

TESMAN.

Of course you don’t notice it so much now that she has that dress on. But I, who can see——
HEDDA.

[At the glass door, impatiently.] Oh, you can’t see anything.

TESMAN.

It must be the mountain air in the Tyrol—

HEDDA.

[Curtly, interrupting.] I am exactly as I was when I started.

TESMAN.

So you insist; but I’m quite certain you are not. Don’t you agree with me, Auntie?

MISS TESMAN.

[Who has been gazing at her with folded hands.] Hedda is lovely—lovely—lovely. [Goes up to her, takes her head between both hands, draws it downwards, and kisses her hair.] God bless and preserve Hedda Tesman—for George’s sake.

HEDDA.

[Gently freeing herself.] Oh—! Let me go.

MISS TESMAN.

[In quiet emotion.] I shall not let a day pass without coming to see you.

TESMAN.

No you won’t, will you, Auntie? Eh?
MISS TESMAN.

Good-bye—good-bye!
[She goes out by the hall door. TESMAN accompanies her. The door remains half open. TESMAN can be heard repeating his message to Aunt Rina and his thanks for the slippers.

[In the meantime, HEDDA walks about the room, raising her arms and clenching her hands as if in desperation. Then she flings back the curtains from the glass door, and stands there looking out.]

[Presently TESMAN returns and closes the door behind him.

TESMAN.

[Picks up the slippers from the floor.] What are you looking at, Hedda?

HEDDA.

[Once more calm and mistress of herself.] I am only looking at the leaves. They are so yellow—so withered.

TESMAN.

[Wraps up the slippers and lays them on the table.] Well you see, we are well into September now.

HEDDA.

[Again restless.] Yes, to think of it!—Already in—in September.

TESMAN.

Don’t you think Aunt Julia’s manner was strange, dear? Almost solemn? Can you imagine what was the matter with her? Eh?
HEDDA GABLER

[ACT I]

HEDDA.

I scarcely know her, you see. Is she not often like that?

TESMAN.

No, not as she was to-day.

HEDDA.

[Leaving the glass door.] Do you think she was annoyed about the bonnet?

TESMAN.

Oh, scarcely at all. Perhaps a little, just at the moment——

HEDDA.

But what an idea, to pitch her bonnet about in the drawing-room! No one does that sort of thing.

TESMAN.

Well you may be sure Aunt Julia won’t do it again.

HEDDA.

In any case, I shall manage to make my peace with her.

TESMAN.

Yes, my dear, good Hedda, if you only would.

HEDDA.

When you call this afternoon, you might invite her to spend the evening here.
Tesan.

Yes, that I will. And there's one thing more you could do that would delight her heart.

Hedda.

What is it?

Tesan.

If you could only prevail on yourself to say du¹ to her. For my sake, Hedda? Eh?

Hedda.

No no, Tesman—you really mustn't ask that of me. I have told you so already. I shall try to call her "Aunt"; and you must be satisfied with that.

Tesan.

Well well. Only I think now that you belong to the family, you—

Hedda.

H'm—I can't in the least see why—

[She goes up towards the middle doorway.

Tesan.

[After a pause.] Is there anything the matter with you, Hedda? Eh?

Hedda.

I'm only looking at my old piano. It doesn't go at all well with all the other things.

¹Du=thou: Tesman means, "If you could persuade yourself to tutoyer her."
Tesman.

The first time I draw my salary, we'll see about exchanging it.

Hedda.

No, no—no exchanging. I don't want to part with it. Suppose we put it there in the inner room, and then get another here in its place. When it's convenient, I mean.

Tesman.

[A little taken aback.] Yes—of course we could do that.

Hedda.

[Takes up the bouquet from the piano.] These flowers were not here last night when we arrived.

Tesman.

Aunt Julia must have brought them for you.

Hedda.

[Examining the bouquet.] A visiting-card. [Takes it out and reads:] "Shall return later in the day." Can you guess whose card it is?

Tesman.

No. Whose? Eh?

Hedda.

The name is "Mrs. Elvsted."
Tesan.

Is it really? Sheriff Elvsted’s wife? Miss Rysing that was.

Hedda.

Exactly. The girl with the irritating hair, that she was always showing off. An old flame of yours I’ve been told.

Tesan.

[Laughing.] Oh, that didn’t last long; and it was before I knew you, Hedda. But fancy her being in town!

Hedda.

It’s odd that she should call upon us. I have scarcely seen her since we left school.

Tesan.

I haven’t seen her either for—heaven knows how long. I wonder how she can endure to live in such an out-of-the-way hole—eh?

Hedda.

[After a moment’s thought, says suddenly.] Tell me, Tesman—isn’t it somewhere near there that he—that—Eilert Lövborg is living?

Tesan.

Yes, he is somewhere in that part of the country.

Berta enters by the hall door.
BERTA.

That lady, ma'am, that brought some flowers a little while ago, is here again. [Pointing.] The flowers you have in your hand, ma'am.

HEDDA.

Ah, is she? Well, please show her in.

BERTA opens the door for MRS. ELVSTED, and goes out herself.—MRS. ELVSTED is a woman of fragile figure, with pretty, soft features. Her eyes are light blue, large, round, and somewhat prominent, with a startled, inquiring expression. Her hair is remarkably light, almost flaxen, and unusually abundant and wavy. She is a couple of years younger than HEDDA. She wears a dark visiting dress, tasteful, but not quite in the latest fashion.

HEDDA.

[Receives her warmly.] How do you do, my dear Mrs. Elvsted? It's delightful to see you again.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Nervously, struggling for self-control.] Yes, it's a very long time since we met.

TESMAN.

[ Gives her his hand. ] And we too—eh?

HEDDA.

Thanks for your lovely flowers—
HEDDA GABLER

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, not at all—. I would have come straight here yesterday afternoon; but I heard that you were away—

TESMAN.

Have you just come to town? Eh?

MRS. ELVSTED.

I arrived yesterday, about midday. Oh, I was quite in despair when I heard that you were not at home.

HEDDA.

In despair! How so?

TESMAN.

Why, my dear Mrs. Rysing—I mean Mrs. Elvsted—

HEDDA.

I hope that you are not in any trouble?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, I am. And I don’t know another living creature here that I can turn to.

HEDDA.

[Laying the bouquet on the table.] Come—let us sit here on the sofa—

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, I am too restless to sit down.
HEDDA.

Oh no, you’re not. Come here.

[She draws Mrs. Elvsted down upon the sofa and sits at her side.]

TESMAN.

Well? What is it, Mrs. Elvsted—?

HEDDA.

Has anything particular happened to you at home?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes—and no. Oh—I am so anxious you should not misunderstand me—

HEDDA.

Then your best plan is to tell us the whole story, Mrs. Elvsted.

TESMAN.

I suppose that’s what you have come for—eh?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, yes—of course it is. Well then, I must tell you—if you don’t already know—that Eilert Lövborg is in town, too.

HEDDA.

Lövborg—!

TESMAN.

What! Has Eilert Lövborg come back? Fancy that, Hedda!
HEDDA.

Well well—I hear it.

MRS. ELVSTED.

He has been here a week already. Just fancy—a whole week! In this terrible town, alone! With so many temptations on all sides.

HEDDA.

But, my dear Mrs. Elvsted—how does he concern you so much?

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Looks at her with a startled air, and says rapidly.] He was the children’s tutor.

HEDDA.

Your children’s?

MRS. ELVSTED.

My husband’s. I have none.

HEDDA.

Your step-children’s, then?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes.

TESMAN.

[Somewhat hesitatingly.] Then was he—I don’t know how to express it—was he—regular enough in his habits to be fit for the post? Eh?
Mrs. Elvsted.

For the last two years his conduct has been irreproachable.

Tesman.

Has it indeed? Fancy that, Hedda!

Hedda.

I hear it.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Perfectly irreproachable, I assure you! In every respect. But all the same—now that I know he is here—in this great town—and with a large sum of money in his hands—I can’t help being in mortal fear for him.

Tesman.

Why did he not remain where he was? With you and your husband? Eh?

Mrs. Elvsted.

After his book was published he was too restless and unsettled to remain with us.

Tesman.

Yes, by-the-bye, Aunt Julia told me he had published a new book.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, a big book, dealing with the march of civilisation—in broad outline, as it were. It came out about a fortnight ago. And since it has sold so well, and been so much read—and made such a sensation——
Has it indeed? It must be something he has had lying by since his better days.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Long ago, you mean?

Tesman.

Yes.

Mrs. Elvsted.

No, he has written it all since he has been with us—within the last year.

Tesman.

Isn’t that good news, Hedda? Think of that.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Ah yes, if only it would last!

Hedda.

Have you seen him here in town?

Mrs. Elvsted.

No, not yet. I have had the greatest difficulty in finding out his address. But this morning I discovered it at last.

Hedda.

[Looks searchingly at her.] Do you know, it seems to me a little odd of your husband—h’m——
HEDDA GABLER

[ACT I]

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Starting nervously.] Of my husband! What?

HEDDA.

That he should send you to town on such an errand—that he does not come himself and look after his friend.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh no, no—my husband has no time. And besides, I—I had some shopping to do.

HEDDA.

[With a slight smile.] Ah, that is a different matter.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Rising quickly and uneasily.] And now I beg and implore you, Mr. Tesman—receive Eilert Lövborg kindly if he comes to you! And that he is sure to do. You see you were such great friends in the old days. And then you are interested in the same studies—the same branch of science—so far as I can understand.

TESMAN.

We used to be, at any rate.

MRS. ELVSTED.

That is why I beg so earnestly that you—you too—will keep a sharp eye upon him. Oh, you will promise me that, Mr. Tesman—won’t you?
HEDDA GABLER

ACT I

TESMAN.

With the greatest of pleasure, Mrs. Rysing——

HEDDA.

Elvsted.

TESMAN.

I assure you I shall do all I possibly can for Eilert. You may rely upon me.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, how very, very kind of you! [Presses his hands.] Thanks, thanks, thanks! [Frightened.] You see, my husband is so very fond of him!

HEDDA.

[Rising.] You ought to write to him, Tesman. Perhaps he may not care to come to you of his own accord.

TESMAN.

Well, perhaps it would be the right thing to do, Hedda? Eh?

HEDDA.

And the sooner the better. Why not at once?

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Imploringly.] Oh, if you only would!

TESMAN.

I'll write this moment. Have you his address, Mrs.—Mrs. Elvsted.
HEDDA GABLER

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes.  [Takes a slip of paper from her pocket, and hands it to him.] Here it is.

TESMAN.

Good, good. Then I'll go in—— [Looks about him.] By-the-bye,—my slippers? Oh, here.  [Takes the packet, and is about to go.

HEDDA.

Be sure you write him a cordial, friendly letter. And a good long one too.

TESMAN.

Yes, I will.

MRS. ELVSTED.

But please, please don't say a word to show that I have suggested it.

TESMAN.

No, how could you think I would? Eh?  [He goes out to the right, through the inner room.

HEDDA.

[Goes up to MRS. ELVSTED, smiles, and says in a low voice.] There! We have killed two birds with one stone.

MRS. ELVSTED.

What do you mean?

HEDDA.

Could you not see that I wanted him to go?
HEDDA GABLER

ACT I

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, to write the letter——

Hedda.

And that I might speak to you alone.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Confused.] About the same thing?

Hedda.

Precisely.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Apprehensively.] But there is nothing more, Mrs. Tesman! Absolutely nothing!

Hedda.

Oh yes, but there is. There is a great deal more—I can see that. Sit here—and we'll have a cosy, confidential chat.

[She forces Mrs. Elvsted to sit in the easy-chair beside the stove, and seats herself on one of the footstools.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Anxiously, looking at her watch.] But, my dear Mrs. Tesman—I was really on the point of going.

Hedda.

Oh, you can't be in such a hurry.—Well? Now tell me something about your life at home.
HEDDA GABLER

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, that is just what I care least to speak about.

HEDDA.

But to me, dear——? Why, weren’t we schoolfellows?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, but you were in the class above me. Oh, how dreadfully afraid of you I was then!

HEDDA.

Afraid of me?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, dreadfully. For when we met on the stairs you used always to pull my hair.

HEDDA.

Did I, really?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, and once you said you would burn it off my head.

HEDDA.

Oh that was all nonsense, of course.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, but I was so silly in those days.—And since then, too—we have drifted so far—far apart from each other. Our circles have been so entirely different.
HEDDA.

Well then, we must try to drift together again. Now listen! At school we said *du*¹ to each other; and we called each other by our Christian names——

MRS. ELVSTED.

No, I am sure you must be mistaken.

HEDDA.

No, not at all! I can remember quite distinctly. So now we are going to renew our old friendship. *[Draws the footstool closer to MRS. ELVSTED.] There now! [Kisses her cheek.] You must say du to me and call me Hedda.

MRS. ELVSTED.

*[Presses and pats her hands.] Oh, how good and kind you are! I am not used to such kindness.

HEDDA.

There, there, there! And I shall say du to you, as in the old days, and call you my dear Thora.²

MRS. ELVSTED.

My name is Thea.²

HEDDA.

Why, of course! I meant Thea. *[Looks at her compassionately.] So you are not accustomed to goodness and kindness, Thea? Not in your own home?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, if I only had a home! But I haven't any; I have never had a home.

HEDDA.

[Looks at her for a moment.] I almost suspected as much.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Gazing helplessly before her.] Yes—yes—yes.

HEDDA.

I don't quite remember—was it not as housekeeper that you first went to Mr. Elvsted's?

MRS. ELVSTED.

I really went as governess. But his wife—his late wife—was an invalid,—and rarely left her room. So I had to look after the housekeeping as well.

HEDDA.

And then—at last—you became mistress of the house.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Sadly.] Yes, I did.

HEDDA.

Let me see—about how long ago was that?

MRS. ELVSTED.

My marriage?
Act 1] Hedda Gabler

Hedda.

Yes.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Five years ago.

Hedda.

To be sure; it must be that.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh those five years—! Or at all events the last two or three of them! Oh, if you could only imagine—

Hedda.

[Giving her a little slap on the hand.] De? Fie, Thea!

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, yes, I will try— Well, if—you could only imagine and understand—

Hedda.

[Lightly.] Eilert Lövborg has been in your neighbourhood about three years, hasn’t he?

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Looks at her doubtfully.] Eilert Lövborg? Yes—he has.

Hedda.

Had you known him before, in town here?

Mrs. Elvsted here uses the formal pronoun De, whereupon Hedda rebukes her. In her next speech Mrs. Elvsted says du.
HEDDA GABLER

MRS. ELVSTED.

Scarcely at all. I mean—I knew him by name of course.

HEDDA.

But you saw a good deal of him in the country?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, he came to us every day. You see, he gave the children lessons; for in the long run I couldn’t manage it all myself.

HEDDA.

No, that’s clear.—And your husband——? I suppose he is often away from home?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes. Being sheriff, you know, he has to travel about a good deal in his district.

HEDDA.

[Leaning against the arm of the chair.] Thea—my poor, sweet Thea—now you must tell me everything—exactly as it stands.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Well then, you must question me.

HEDDA.

What sort of a man is your husband, Thea? I mean—you know—in everyday life. Is he kind to you?
Mrs. Elvsted.

[Evasively.] I am sure he means well in everything.

Hedda.

I should think he must be altogether too old for you. There is at least twenty years' difference between you, is there not?

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Irritably.] Yes, that is true, too. Everything about him is repellent to me! We have not a thought in common. We have no single point of sympathy—he and I.

Hedda.

But is he not fond of you all the same? In his own way?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh I really don't know. I think he regards me simply as a useful property. And then it doesn't cost much to keep me. I am not expensive.

Hedda.

That is stupid of you.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Shakes her head.] It cannot be otherwise—not with him. I don't think he really cares for any one but himself—and perhaps a little for the children.

Hedda.

And for Eilert Lövborg, Thea.
HEDDA GABLER

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Looking at her.] For Eilert Lövborg? What puts that into your head?

HEDDA.

Well, my dear—I should say, when he sends you after him all the way to town— [Smiling almost imperceptibly.] And besides, you said so yourself, to Tesman.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[With a little nervous twitch.] Did I? Yes, I suppose I did. [Vehemently, but not loudly.] No—I may just as well make a clean breast of it at once! For it must all come out in any case.

HEDDA.

Why, my dear Thea—?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Well, to make a long story short: My husband did not know that I was coming.

HEDDA.

What! Your husband didn’t know it!

MRS. ELVSTED.

No, of course not. For that matter, he was away from home himself—he was travelling. Oh, I could bear it no longer, Hedda! I couldn’t indeed—so utterly alone as I should have been in future.

HEDDA.

Well? And then?
Mrs. Elvsted.

So I put together some of my things—what I needed most—as quietly as possible. And then I left the house.

Hedda.

Without a word?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes—and took the train straight to town.

Hedda.

Why, my dear, good Thea—to think of you daring to do it!

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Rises and moves about the room.] What else could I possibly do?

Hedda.

But what do you think your husband will say when you go home again?

Mrs. Elvsted.

[At the table, looks at her.] Back to him?

Hedda.

Of course.

Mrs. Elvsted.

I shall never go back to him again.

Hedda.

[Rising and going towards her.] Then you have left your home—for good and all?
MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes. There was nothing else to be done.

HEDDA.

But then—to take flight so openly!

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, it's impossible to keep things of that sort secret.

HEDDA.

But what do you think people will say of you, Thea?

MRS. ELVSTED.

They may say what they like, for aught I care. [Seats herself wearily and sadly on the sofa.] I have done nothing but what I had to do.

HEDDA.

[After a short silence.] And what are your plans now? What do you think of doing?

MRS. ELVSTED.

I don't know yet. I only know this, that I must live here, where Eilert Lövborg is—if I am to live at all.

HEDDA.

[Takes a chair from the table, seats herself beside her, and strokes her hands.] My dear Thea—how did this—this friendship—between you and Eilert Lövborg come about?
Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh it grew up gradually. I gained a sort of influence over him.

Hedda.

Indeed?

Mrs. Elvsted.

He gave up his old habits. Not because I asked him to, for I never dared do that. But of course he saw how repulsive they were to me; and so he dropped them.

Hedda.

[Concealing an involuntary smile of scorn.] Then you have reclaimed him—as the saying goes—my little Thea.

Mrs. Elvsted.

So he says himself, at any rate. And he, on his side, has made a real human being of me—taught me to think, and to understand so many things.

Hedda.

Did he give you lessons too, then?

Mrs. Elvsted.

No, not exactly lessons. But he talked to me—talked about such an infinity of things. And then came the lovely, happy time when I began to share in his work—when he allowed me to help him!

Hedda.

Oh he did, did he?
HEDDA GABLER

[MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes! He never wrote anything without my assistance.

HEDDA.

You were two good comrades, in fact?

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Eagerly.] Comrades! Yes, fancy, Hedda—that is the very word he used!—Oh, I ought to feel perfectly happy; and yet I cannot; for I don't know how long it will last.

HEDDA.

Are you no surer of him than that?

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Gloomily.] A woman's shadow stands between Eilert Lövborg and me.

HEDDA.

[Looks at her anxiously.] Who can that be?

MRS. ELVSTED.

I don't know. Some one he knew in his—in his past. Some one he has never been able wholly to forget.

HEDDA.

What has he told you—about this?

MRS. ELVSTED.

He has only once—quite vaguely—alluded to it.
Hedda.

Well! And what did he say?

Mrs. Elvsted.

He said that when they parted, she threatened to shoot him with a pistol.

Hedda.

[With cold composure.] Oh nonsense! No one does that sort of thing here.

Mrs. Elvsted.

No. And that is why I think it must have been that red-haired singing-woman whom he once—

Hedda.

Yes, very likely.

Mrs. Elvsted.

For I remember they used to say of her that she carried loaded firearms.

Hedda.

Oh—then of course it must have been she.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Wringing her hands.] And now just fancy, Hedda—I hear that this singing-woman—that she is in town again! Oh, I don’t know what to do—

Hedda.

[Glancing towards the inner room.] Hush! Here comes Tesman. [Rises and whispers.] Thea—all this must remain between you and me.
MRS. ELVSTED.

[Springing up.] Oh yes—yes! For heaven's sake—!

GEORGE TESMAN, with a letter in his hand, comes from the right through the inner room.

TESMAN.

There now—the epistle is finished.

HEDDA.

That's right. And now Mrs. Elvsted is just going. Wait a moment—I'll go with you to the garden gate.

TESMAN.

Do you think Berta could post the letter, Hedda dear?

HEDDA.

[Takes it.] I will tell her to.

BERTA enters from the hall.

BERTA.

Judge Brack wishes to know if Mrs. Tesman will receive him.

HEDDA.

Yes, ask Judge Brack to come in. And look here—put this letter in the post.

BERTA.

[Taking the letter.] Yes, ma'am.

[She opens the door for Judge Brack and goes out herself. Brack is a man of forty-five; thick set, but well-built and elastic in his movements. His face is roundish with an aristocratic profile. His hair is short, still almost black, and carefully dressed. His eyes are lively and sparkling. His eyebrows thick. His moustaches are also thick, with short-cut ends. He wears a well-cut walking-suit, a little too youthful for his age. He uses an eye-glass, which he now and then lets drop.

Judge Brack.

With his hat in his hand, bowing. May one venture to call so early in the day?

Hedda.

Of course one may.

Tesman.

Presses his hand. You are welcome at any time. [Introducing him.] Judge Brack—Miss Rysing——

Hedda.

Oh——!

Brack.

Bowing. Ah—delighted——

Hedda.

Looks at him and laughs. It’s nice to have a look at you by daylight, Judge!

Brack.

Do you find me—altered?
HEDDA.

A little younger, I think.

BRACK.

Thank you so much.

TESMAN.

But what do you think of Hedda—eh? Doesn’t she look flourishing? She has actually—

HEDDA.

Oh, do leave me alone. You haven’t thanked Judge Brack for all the trouble he has taken—

BRACK.

Oh, nonsense—it was a pleasure to me—

HEDDA.

Yes, you are a friend indeed. But here stands Thea all impatience to be off—so au revoir, Judge. I shall be back again presently.

[Mutual salutations. MRS. ELVSTED and HEDDA go out by the hall door.

BRACK.

Well,—is your wife tolerably satisfied—

TESMAN.

Yes, we can’t thank you sufficiently. Of course she talks of a little re-arrangement here and there; and one or two things are still wanting. We shall have to buy some additional trifles.
Indeed!

But we won’t trouble you about these things. Hedda says she herself will look after what is wanting.—Shan’t we sit down? Eh?

Thanks, for a moment. [Seats himself beside the table.] There is something I wanted to speak to you about, my dear Tesman.

Indeed? Ah, I understand! [Seating himself.] I suppose it’s the serious part of the frolic that is coming now. Eh?

Oh, the money question is not so very pressing; though, for that matter, I wish we had gone a little more economically to work.

But that would never have done, you know! Think of Hedda, my dear fellow! You, who know her so well——. I couldn’t possibly ask her to put up with a shabby style of living!

No, no—that is just the difficulty.

And then—fortunately—it can’t be long before I receive my appointment.
Brack.

Well, you see—such things are often apt to hang fire for a time.

Tesman.

Have you heard anything definite? Eh?

Brack.

Nothing exactly definite—. [Interrupting himself.] But by-the-bye—I have one piece of news for you.

Tesman.

Well?

Brack.

Your old friend, Eilert Lövborg, has returned to town.

Tesman.

I know that already.

Brack.

Indeed! How did you learn it?

Tesman.

From that lady who went out with Hedda.

Brack.

Really? What was her name? I didn’t quite catch it.

Tesman.

Mrs. Elvsted.
Brack.

Aha—Sheriff Elvsted’s wife? Of course—he has been living up in their regions.

Tesman.

And fancy—I’m delighted to hear that he is quite a reformed character!

Brack.

So they say.

Tesman.

And then he has published a new book—eh?

Brack.

Yes, indeed he has.

Tesman.

And I hear it has made some sensation!

Brack.

Quite an unusual sensation.

Tesman.

Fancy—isn’t that good news! A man of such extraordinary talents——. I felt so grieved to think that he had gone irretrievably to ruin.

Brack.

That was what everybody thought.
TESMAN.

But I cannot imagine what he will take to now! How in the world will he be able to make his living? Eh?

[During the last words, Hedda has entered by the hall door.

HEDDA.

[To Brack, laughing with a touch of scorn.] Tesman is for ever worrying about how people are to make their living.

TESMAN.

Well you see, dear—we were talking about poor Eilert Lövborg.

HEDDA.

[Glancing at him rapidly.] Oh, indeed? [Seats herself in the arm-chair beside the stove and asks indifferently:] What is the matter with him?

TESMAN.

Well—no doubt he has run through all his property long ago; and he can scarcely write a new book every year—eh? So I really can't see what is to become of him.

BRACK.

Perhaps I can give you some information on that point.

TESMAN.

Indeed!
Brack.

You must remember that his relations have a good deal of influence.

Tesman.

Oh, his relations, unfortunately, have entirely washed their hands of him.

Brack.

At one time they called him the hope of the family.

Tesman.

At one time, yes! But he has put an end to all that.

Hedda.

Who knows? [With a slight smile.] I hear they have reclaimed him up at Sheriff Elvsted's——

Brack.

And then this book that he has published——

Tesman.

Well well, I hope to goodness they may find something for him to do. I have just written to him. I asked him to come and see us this evening, Hedda dear.

Brack.

But my dear fellow, you are booked for my bachelors' party this evening. You promised on the pier last night.

Hedda.

Had you forgotten, Tesman?
Tesman.

Yes, I had utterly forgotten.

Brack.

But it doesn’t matter, for you may be sure he won’t come.

Tesman.

What makes you think that? Eh?

Brack.

[With a little hesitation, rising and resting his hands on the back of his chair.] My dear Tesman—and you too, Mrs. Tesman—I think I ought not to keep you in the dark about something that—that—

Tesman.

That concerns Eilert—?

Brack.

Both you and him.

Tesman.

Well, my dear Judge, out with it.

Brack.

You must be prepared to find your appointment deferred longer than you desired or expected.

Tesman.

[Jumping up uneasily.] Is there some hitch about it? Eh?
BRACK.

The nomination may perhaps be made conditional on the result of a competition——

TESMAN.

Competition! Think of that, Hedda!

HEDDA.

[Leans further back in the chair.] Aha—aha!

TESMAN.

But who can my competitor be? Surely not——?

BRACK.

Yes, precisely—Eilert Lövborg.

TESMAN.

[Clasping his hands.] No, no—it’s quite inconceivable! Quite impossible! Eh?

BRACK.

H’m—that is what it may come to, all the same.

TESMAN.

Well but, Judge Brack—it would show the most incredible lack of consideration for me. [Gesticulates with his arms.] For—just think—I’m a married man! We have married on the strength of these prospects, Hedda and I; and run deep into debt; and borrowed money from Aunt Julia too. Good heavens, they had as good as promised me the appointment. Eh?
Brack.

Well, well, well—no doubt you will get it in the end; only after a contest.

Hedda.

[Immovable in her arm-chair.] Fancy, Tesman, there will be a sort of sporting interest in that.

Tesman.

Why, my dearest Hedda, how can you be so indifferent about it.

Hedda.

[As before.] I am not at all indifferent. I am most eager to see who wins.

Brack.

In any case, Mrs. Tesman, it is best that you should know how matters stand. I mean—before you set about the little purchases I hear you are threatening.

Hedda.

This can make no difference.

Brack.

Indeed! Then I have no more to say. Good-bye! [To Tesman.] I shall look in on my way back from my afternoon walk, and take you home with me.

Tesman.

Oh yes, yes—your news has quite upset me.
HEDDA.

[Reclining, holds out her hand.] Good-bye, Judge; and be sure you call in the afternoon.

BRACK.
Many thanks. Good-bye, good-bye!

TESMAN.

[Accompanying him to the door.] Good-bye, my dear Judge! You must really excuse me——

[JUDGE BRACK goes out by the hall door.

TESMAN.

[Crosses the room.] Oh Hedda—one should never rush into adventures. Eh?

HEDDA.

[Looks at him, smiling.] Do you do that?

TESMAN.

Yes, dear—there is no denying—it was adventurous to go and marry and set up house upon mere expectations.

HEDDA.

Perhaps you are right there.

TESMAN.

Well—at all events, we have our delightful home, Hedda! Fancy, the home we both dreamed of—the home we were in love with, I may almost say. Eh?
HEDDA GABLER

HEDDA.

[Rising slowly and wearily.] It was part of our compact that we were to go into society—to keep open house.

TESMAN.

Yes, if you only knew how I had been looking forward to it! Fancy—to see you as hostess—in a select circle! Eh? Well, well, well—for the present we shall have to get on without society, Hedda—only to invite Aunt Julia now and then.—Oh, I intended you to lead such an utterly different life, dear—!

HEDDA.

Of course I cannot have my man in livery just yet.

TESMAN.

Oh no, unfortunately. It would be out of the question for us to keep a footman, you know.

HEDDA.

And the saddle-horse I was to have had—

TESMAN.

[Aghast.] The saddle-horse!

HEDDA.

—I suppose I must not think of that now.

TESMAN.

Good heavens, no!—that's as clear as daylight!
HEDDA GABLER

HEDDA.

[Goes up the room.] Well, I shall have one thing at least to kill time with in the meanwhile.

TESMAN.

[Beaming.] Oh thank heaven for that! What is it, Hedda? Eh?

HEDDA.

[In the middle doorway, looks at him with covert scorn.] My pistols, George.

TESMAN.

[In alarm.] Your pistols!

HEDDA.

[With cold eyes.] General Gabler’s pistols.

[She goes out through the inner room, to the left.

TESMAN.

[Rushes up to the middle doorway and calls after her:] No, for heaven’s sake, Hedda darling—don’t touch those dangerous things! For my sake, Hedda! Eh?
ACT SECOND

The room at the Tesmans' as in the first Act, except that the piano has been removed, and an elegant little writing-table with book-shelves put in its place. A smaller table stands near the sofa on the left. Most of the bouquets have been taken away. Mrs. Elvsted's bouquet is upon the large table in front.—It is afternoon.

Hedda, dressed to receive callers, is alone in the room. She stands by the open glass door, loading a revolver. The fellow to it lies in an open pistol-case on the writing-table.

Hedda.

[Looks down the garden, and calls:] So you are here again, Judge!

Brack.

[Is heard calling from a distance.] As you see, Mrs. Tesman!

Hedda.

[Raises the pistol and points.] Now I'll shoot you, Judge Brack!

Brack.

[Calling unseen.] No, no, no! Don't stand aiming at me!
Hedda.
This is what comes of sneaking in by the back way.¹

[She fires.

Brack.

[Nearer.] Are you out of your senses——!

Hedda.
Dear me—did I happen to hit you?

Brack.

[Still outside.] I wish you would let these pranks alone!

Hedda.
Come in then, Judge.

Judge Brack, dressed as though for a men’s party, enters by the glass door. He carries a light overcoat over his arm.

Brack.

What the deuce—haven’t you tired of that sport, yet? What are you shooting at?

Hedda.
Oh, I am only firing in the air.

Brack.

[Gently takes the pistol out of her hand.] Allow me, madam! [Looks at it.] Ah—I know this pistol well!

¹ “Bagveje” means both “back ways” and “underhand courses.”
[Looks around.] Where is the case? Ah, here it is.
[Looks the pistol in it, and shuts it.] Now we won't play at that game any more to-day.

Hedda.

Then what in heaven's name would you have me do with myself?

Brack.

Have you had no visitors?

Hedda.

[Closing the glass door.] Not one. I suppose all our set are still out of town.

Brack.

And is Tesman not at home either?

Hedda.

[At the writing-table, putting the pistol-case in a drawer which she shuts.] No. He rushed off to his aunt's directly after lunch; he didn't expect you so early.

Brack.

H'm—how stupid of me not to have thought of that!

Hedda.

[Turning her head to look at him.] Why stupid?

Brack.

Because if I had thought of it I should have come a little—earlier.
ACT II] HEDDA GABLER 89

HEDDA.

[Crossing the room.] Then you would have found no one to receive you; for I have been in my room changing my dress ever since lunch.

BRACK.

And is there no sort of little chink that we could hold a parley through?

HEDDA.

You have forgotten to arrange one.

BRACK.

That was another piece of stupidity.

HEDDA.

Well, we must just settle down here—and wait. Tesman is not likely to be back for some time yet.

BRACK.

Never mind; I shall not be impatient.

HEDDA seats herself in the corner of the sofa. BRACK lays his overcoat over the back of the nearest chair, and sits down, but keeps his hat in his hand. A short silence. They look at each other.

HEDDA.

Well?

BRACK.

[In the same tone.] Well?
HEDDA.

I spoke first.

BRACK.

[Bending a little forward.] Come, let us have a cosy little chat, Mrs. Hedda.¹

HEDDA.

[Leaning further back in the sofa.] Does it not seem like a whole eternity since our last talk? Of course I don’t count those few words yesterday evening and this morning.

BRACK.

You mean since our last confidential talk? Our last tête-à-tête?

HEDDA.

Well yes—since you put it so.

BRACK.

Not a day has passed but I have wished that you were home again.

HEDDA.

And I have done nothing but wish the same thing.

BRACK.

You? Really, Mrs. Hedda? And I thought you had been enjoying your tour so much!

¹ As this form of address is contrary to English usage, and as the note of familiarity would be lacking in “Mrs. Tesman,” Brack may, in stage representation, say “Miss Hedda,” thus ignoring her marriage and reverting to the form of address no doubt customary between them of old.
Hedda.
Oh yes, you may be sure of that!

Brack.
But Tesman's letters spoke of nothing but happiness.

Hedda.
Oh, Tesman! You see, he thinks nothing so delightful as grubbing in libraries and making copies of old parchments, or whatever you call them.

Brack.
[With a spice of malice.] Well, that is his vocation in life—or part of it at any rate.

Hedda.
Yes, of course; and no doubt when it's your vocation——. But I! Oh, my dear Mr. Brack, how mortally bored I have been.

Brack.
[Sympathetically.] Do you really say so? In downright earnest?

Hedda.
Yes, you can surely understand it——! To go for six whole months without meeting a soul that knew anything of our circle, or could talk about the things we are interested in.

Brack.
Yes, yes—I too should feel that a deprivation.
HEDDA.

And then, what I found most intolerable of all——

BRACK.

Well?

HEDDA.

——was being everlastingly in the company of—one and the same person——

BRACK.

[With a nod of assent.] Morning, noon, and night, yes—at all possible times and seasons.

HEDDA.

I said "everlastingly."

BRACK.

Just so. But I should have thought, with our excellent Tesman, one could——

HEDDA.

Tesman is—a specialist, my dear Judge.

BRACK.

Undeniably.

HEDDA.

And specialists are not at all amusing to travel with. Not in the long run at any rate.

BRACK.

Not even—the specialist one happens to love?
Hedda.

Faugh—don't use that sickening word!

Brack.

[Taken aback.] What do you say, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.

[Half laughing, half irritated.] You should just try it! To hear of nothing but the history of civilisation, morning, noon, and night—

Brack.

Everlastingly.

Hedda.

Yes, yes, yes! And then all this about the domestic industry of the middle ages—! That's the most disgusting part of it!

Brack.

[Looks searchingly at her.] But tell me—in that case, how am I to understand your—? H'm—

Hedda.

My accepting George Tesman, you mean?

Brack.

Well, let us put it so.

Hedda.

Good heavens, do you see anything so wonderful in that?
Yes and no—Mrs. Hedda.

I had positively danced myself tired, my dear Judge. My day was done— [With a slight shudder.] Oh no—I won’t say that; nor think it either!

You have assuredly no reason to.

Oh, reasons— [Watching him closely.] And George Tesman—after all, you must admit that he is correctness itself.

His correctness and respectability are beyond all question.

And I don’t see anything absolutely ridiculous about him.—Do you?

Ridiculous? N—no—I shouldn’t exactly say so——

Well—and his powers of research, at all events, are untiring.—I see no reason why he should not one day come to the front, after all.
[Looks at her hesitatingly.] I thought that you, like every one else, expected him to attain the highest distinction.

Hedda.

[With an expression of fatigue.] Yes, so I did.—And then, since he was bent, at all hazards, on being allowed to provide for me—I really don’t know why I should not have accepted his offer?

Brack.

No—if you look at it in that light——

Hedda.

It was more than my other adorers were prepared to do for me, my dear Judge.

Brack.

[Laughing.] Well, I can’t answer for all the rest; but as for myself, you know quite well that I have always entertained a—a certain respect for the marriage tie—for marriage as an institution, Mrs. Hedda.

Hedda.

[Jestingly.] Oh, I assure you I have never cherished any hopes with respect to you.

Brack.

All I require is a pleasant and intimate interior, where I can make myself useful in every way, and am free to come and go as—as a trusted friend——
HEDDA.

Of the master of the house, do you mean?

BRACK.

[Bowing.] Frankly—of the mistress first of all; but of course of the master too, in the second place. Such a triangular friendship—if I may call it so—is really a great convenience for all parties, let me tell you.

HEDDA.

Yes, I have many a time longed for some one to make a third on our travels. Oh—those railway-carriage tête-à-têtes—!

BRACK.

Fortunately your wedding journey is over now.

HEDDA.

[Shaking her head.] Not by a long—long way. I have only arrived at a station on the line.

BRACK.

Well, then the passengers jump out and move about a little, Mrs. Hedda.

HEDDA.

I never jump out.

BRACK.

Really?

HEDDA.

No—because there is always some one standing by to—
Brack.

[Laughing.] To look at your ankles, do you mean?

Hedda.

Precisely.

Brack.

Well but, dear me—

Hedda.

[With a gesture of repulsion.] I won't have it. I would rather keep my seat where I happen to be—and continue the tête-à-tête.

Brack.

But suppose a third person were to jump in and join the couple.

Hedda.

Ah—that is quite another matter!

Brack.

A trusted, sympathetic friend—

Hedda.

—with a fund of conversation on all sorts of lively topics—

Brack.

—and not the least bit of a specialist!

Hedda:

[With an audible sigh.] Yes, that would be a relief indeed.
Brack.

[Hears the front door open, and glances in that direction.] The triangle is completed.

Hedda.

[Half aloud.] And on goes the train.

George Tesman, in a grey walking-suit, with a soft felt hat, enters from the hall. He has a number of unbound books under his arm and in his pockets.

Tesman.

[Goes up to the table beside the corner settee.] Ouf—what a load for a warm day—all these books. [Lays them on the table.] I'm positively perspiring, Hedda. Hallo—are you there already, my dear Judge? Eh? Berta didn't tell me.

Brack.

[Rising.] I came in through the garden.

Hedda.

What books have you got there?

Tesman.

[Stands looking them through.] Some new books on my special subjects—quite indispensable to me.

Hedda.

Your special subjects?
Brack.

Yes, books on his special subjects, Mrs. Tesman.

[Brack and Hedda exchange a confidential smile.

Hedda.

Do you need still more books on your special subjects?

Tesman.

Yes, my dear Hedda, one can never have too many of them. Of course one must keep up with all that is written and published.

Hedda.

Yes, I suppose one must.

Tesman.

[Searching among his books.] And look here—I have got hold of Eilert Lövborg's new book too. [Offering it to her.] Perhaps you would like to glance through it, Hedda? Eh?

Hedda.

No, thank you. Or rather—afterwards perhaps.

Tesman.

I looked into it a little on the way home.

Brack.

Well, what do you think of it—as a specialist?

Tesman.

I think it shows quite remarkable soundness of judgment. He never wrote like that before. [Putting the Now I shall take all these into my study. I'm longing to cut the leaves—-! And then I must change my clothes. [To Brack.] I suppose we needn't start just yet? Eh?

Brack.

Oh, dear no—there is not the slightest hurry.

Tesman.

Well then, I will take my time. [Is going with his books, but stops in the doorway and turns.] By-the-bye, Hedda—Aunt Julia is not coming this evening.

Hedda.

Not coming? Is it that affair of the bonnet that keeps her away?

Tesman.

Oh, not at all. How could you think such a thing of Aunt Julia? Just fancy—-! The fact is, Aunt Rina is very ill.

Hedda.

She always is.

Tesman.

Yes, but to-day she is much worse than usual, poor dear.

Hedda.

Oh, then it's only natural that her sister should remain with her. I must bear my disappointment.
TESMAN.

And you can’t imagine, dear, how delighted Aunt Julia seemed to be—because you had come home looking so flourishing!

HEDDA.

[Half aloud, rising.] Oh, those everlasting Aunts!

TESMAN.

What?

HEDDA.

[Going to the glass door.] Nothing.

TESMAN.

Oh, all right.

[He goes through the inner room, out to the right.

BRACK.

What bonnet were you talking about?

HEDDA.

Oh, it was a little episode with Miss Tesman this morning. She had laid down her bonnet on the chair there—[Looks at him and smiles.]—and I pretended to think it was the servant’s.

BRACK.

[Shaking his head.] Now my dear Mrs. Hedda, how could you do such a thing? To that excellent old lady, too!
HEDDA.

[Nervously crossing the room.] Well, you see—these impulses come over me all of a sudden; and I cannot resist them. [Throws herself down in the easy-chair by the stove.] Oh, I don’t know how to explain it.

BRACK.

[Behind the easy-chair.] You are not really happy—that is at the bottom of it.

HEDDA.

[Looking straight before her.] I know of no reason why I should be—happy. Perhaps you can give me one?

BRACK.

Well—amongst other things, because you have got exactly the home you had set your heart on.

HEDDA.

[Looks up at him and laughs.] Do you too believe in that legend?

BRACK.

Is there nothing in it, then?

HEDDA.

Oh yes, there is something in it.

BRACK.

Well?
HEDDA.

There is this in it, that I made use of Tesman to see me home from evening parties last summer—

BRACK.

I, unfortunately, had to go quite a different way.

HEDDA.

That's true. I know you were going a different way last summer.

BRACK.

[Laughing.] Oh fie, Mrs. Hedda! Well, then—you and Tesman——?

HEDDA.

Well, we happened to pass here one evening; Tesman, poor fellow, was writhing in the agony of having to find conversation; so I took pity on the learned man——

BRACK.

[Smiles doubtfully.] You took pity? H'm——

HEDDA.

Yes, I really did. And so—to help him out of his torment—I happened to say, in pure thoughtlessness, that I should like to live in this villa.

BRACK.

No more than that?
HEDDA.

Not that evening.

BRACK.

But afterwards?

HEDDA.

Yes, my thoughtlessness had consequences, my dear Judge.

BRACK.

Unfortunately that too often happens, Mrs. Hedda.

HEDDA.

Thanks! So you see it was this enthusiasm for Secretary Falk's villa that first constituted a bond of sympathy between George Tesman and me. From that came our engagement and our marriage, and our wedding journey, and all the rest of it. Well, well, my dear Judge—as you make your bed so you must lie, I could almost say.

BRACK.

This is exquisite! And you really cared not a rap about it all the time?

HEDDA.

No, heaven knows I didn't.

BRACK.

But now? Now that we have made it so homelike for you?
Hedda.

Uh—the rooms all seem to smell of lavender and dried rose-leaves.—but perhaps it's Aunt Julia that has brought that scent with her.

Brack.

[Laughing.] No, I think it must be a legacy from the late Mrs. Secretary Falk.

Hedda.

Yes, there is an odour of mortality about it. It reminds me of a bouquet—the day after the ball. [Clasps her hands behind her head, leans back in her chair and looks at him.] Oh, my dear Judge—you cannot imagine how horribly I shall bore myself here.

Brack.

Why should not you, too, find some sort of vocation in life, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.

A vocation—that should attract me?

Brack.

If possible, of course.

Hedda.

Heaven knows what sort of a vocation that could be. I often wonder whether—[Breaking off.] But that would never do either.

Brack.

Who can tell? Let me hear what it is.
HEDDA.

Whether I might not get Tesman to go into politics, I mean.

BRACK.

[Laughing.] Tesman? No really now, political life is not the thing for him—not at all in his line.

HEDDA.

No, I daresay not.—But if I could get him into it all the same?

BRACK.

Why—what satisfaction could you find in that? If he is not fitted for that sort of thing, why should you want to drive him into it?

HEDDA.

Because I am bored, I tell you! [After a pause.] So you think it quite out of the question that Tesman should ever get into the ministry?

BRACK.

H'm—you see, my dear Mrs. Hedda—to get into the ministry, he would have to be a tolerably rich man.

HEDDA.

[Rising impatiently.] Yes, there we have it! It is this genteel poverty I have managed to drop into——! [Crosses the room.] That is what makes life so pitiable! So utterly ludicrous!—For that's what it is.
Brack.

Now I should say the fault lay elsewhere.

Hedda.

Where, then?

Brack.

You have never gone through any really stimulating experience.

Hedda.

Anything serious, you mean?

Brack.

Yes, you may call it so. But now you may perhaps have one in store.

Hedda.

[Tossing her head.] Oh, you’re thinking of the annoyances about this wretched professorship! But that must be Tesman’s own affair. I assure you I shall not waste a thought upon it.

Brack.

No, no, I daresay not. But suppose now that what people call—in elegant language—a solemn responsibility were to come upon you? [Smiling.] A new responsibility, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.

[Angrily.] Be quiet! Nothing of that sort will ever happen!
Brack.

[Warily.] We will speak of this again a year hence—at the very outside.

Hedda.

[Curtly.] I have no turn for anything of the sort, Judge Brack. No responsibilities for me!

Brack.

Are you so unlike the generality of women as to have no turn for duties which—?

Hedda.

[Beside the glass door.] Oh, be quiet, I tell you!—I often think there is only one thing in the world I have any turn for.

Brack.

[Drawing near to her.] And what is that, if I may ask?

Hedda.

[Stands looking out.] Boring myself to death. Now you know it. [Turns, looks towards the inner room, and laughs.] Yes, as I thought! Here comes the Professor.

Brack.

[Softly, in a tone of warning.] Come, come, come, Mrs. Hedda!

George Tesman, dressed for the party, with his gloves and hat in his hand, enters from the right through the inner room.
HEDDA GABLER

ACT II]

TESMAN.

Hedda, has no message come from Eilert Lövborg?
Eh?

HEDDA.

No.

TESMAN.

Then you'll see he'll be here presently.

BRACK.

Do you really think he will come?

TESMAN.

Yes, I am almost sure of it. For what you were telling us this morning must have been a mere floating rumour.

BRACK.

You think so?

TESMAN.

At any rate, Aunt Julia said she did not believe for a moment that he would ever stand in my way again. Fancy that!

BRACK.

Well then, that's all right.

TESMAN.

[Placing his hat and gloves on a chair on the right.] Yes, but you must really let me wait for him as long as possible.
Brack.

We have plenty of time yet. None of my guests will arrive before seven or half-past.

Tesman.

Then meanwhile we can keep Hedda company, and see what happens. Eh?

Hedda.

[Placing Brack's hat and overcoat upon the corner settee.] And at the worst Mr. Lövborg can remain here with me.

Brack.

[Offering to take his things.] Oh, allow me, Mrs. Tesman!—What do you mean by "At the worst"?

Hedda.

If he won't go with you and Tesman.

Tesman.

[Looks dubiously at her.] But, Hedda dear—do you think it would quite do for him to remain with you? Eh? Remember, Aunt Julia can't come.

Hedda.

No, but Mrs. Elvsted is coming. We three can have a cup of tea together.

Tesman.

Oh, yes that will be all right.
Brack.

[Smiling.] And that would perhaps be the safest plan for him.

Hedda.

Why so?

Brack.

Well, you know, Mrs. Tesman, how you used to gird at my little bachelor parties. You declared they were adapted only for men of the strictest principles.

Hedda.

But no doubt Mr. Lövborg’s principles are strict enough now. A converted sinner——

[BERTA appears at the hall door.

Berta.

There’s a gentleman asking if you are at home, ma’am——

Hedda.

Well, show him in.

Tesman.

[Softly.] I’m sure it is he! Fancy that!

EILERT LÖVBORG enters from the hall. He is slim and lean; of the same age as Tesman, but looks older and somewhat worn-out. His hair and beard are of a blackish brown, his face long and pale, but with patches of colour on the cheek-bones. He is dressed in a well-cut black visiting suit, quite new. He has dark gloves and a silk hat. He stops near the door, and makes a rapid bow, seeming somewhat embarrassed.
[Act II]

TESMAN.

[ Goes up to him and shakes him warmly by the hand. ]
Well, my dear Eilert—so at last we meet again!

EILERT LÖVBORG.

[Speaks in a subdued voice. ] Thanks for your letter, Tesman. [Approaching Hedda. ] Will you too shake hands with me, Mrs. Tesman?

HEDDA.

[ Taking his hand. ] I am glad to see you, Mr. Lövborg. [ With a motion of her hand. ] I don’t know whether you two gentlemen——?

LÖVBORG.

[ Bowing slightly. ] Judge Brack, I think.

BRACK.

[ Doing likewise. ] Oh yes,—in the old days——

TESMAN.

[ To Lövborg, with his hands on his shoulders. ] And now you must make yourself entirely at home, Eilert! Mustn’t he, Hedda?—For I hear you are going to settle in town again? Eh?

LÖVBORG.

Yes, I am.

TESMAN.

Quite right, quite right. Let me tell you, I have got hold of your new book; but I haven’t had time to read it yet.
Lövborg.
You may spare yourself the trouble.

Tesman.
Why so?

Lövborg.
Because there is very little in it.

Tesman.
Just fancy—how can you say so?

Brack.
But it has been very much praised, I hear.

Lövborg.
That was what I wanted; so I put nothing into the book but what every one would agree with.

Brack.
Very wise of you.

Tesman.
Well but, my dear Eilert——!

Lövborg.
For now I mean to win myself a position again—to make a fresh start.

Tesman.
[A little embarrassed.] Ah, that is what you wish to do? Eh?
Lövborg.

[Smiling, lays down his hat, and draws a packet, wrapped in paper, from his coat pocket.] But when this one appears, George Tesman, you will have to read it. For this is the real book—the book I have put my true self into.

Tesman.

Indeed? And what is it?

Lövborg.

It is the continuation.

Tesman.

The continuation? Of what?

Lövborg.

Of the book.

Tesman.

Of the new book?

Lövborg.

Of course.

Tesman.

Why, my dear Eilert—does it not come down to our own days?

Lövborg.

Yes, it does; and this one deals with the future.

Tesman.

With the future! But, good heavens, we know nothing of the future!
Lövborg.

No; but there is a thing or two to be said about it all the same. [Opens the packet.] Look here——

Tesman.

Why, that's not your handwriting.

Lövborg.

I dictated it. [Turning over the pages.] It falls into two sections. The first deals with the civilising forces of the future. And here is the second——[running through the pages towards the end]—forecasting the probable line of development.

Tesman.

How odd now! I should never have thought of writing anything of that sort.

Hedda.

[At the glass door, drumming on the pane.] H'm——. I daresay not.

Lövborg.

[Replacing the manuscript in its paper and laying the packet on the table.] I brought it, thinking I might read you a little of it this evening.

Tesman.

That was very good of you, Eilert. But this evening——? [Looking at Brack.] I don't quite see how we can manage it——
Lövborg.

Well then, some other time. There is no hurry.

Brack.

I must tell you, Mr. Lövborg—there is a little gathering at my house this evening—mainly in honour of Tesman, you know—

Lövborg.

[Looking for his hat.] Oh—then I won’t detain you—

Brack.

No, but listen—will you not do me the favour of joining us?

Lövborg.

[Curtly and decidedly.] No, I can’t—thank you very much.

Brack.

Oh, nonsense—do! We shall be quite a select little circle. And I assure you we shall have a “lively time,” as Mrs. Hed—as Mrs. Tesman says.

Lövborg.

I have no doubt of it. But nevertheless—

Brack.

And then you might bring your manuscript with you, and read it to Tesman at my house. I could give you a room to yourselves.
Tesman.

Yes, think of that, Eilert,—why shouldn't you? Eh?

Hedda.

[Interposing.] But, Tesman, if Mr. Lövborg would really rather not! I am sure Mr. Lövborg is much more inclined to remain here and have supper with me.

Lövborg.

[Looking at her.] With you, Mrs. Tesman?

Hedda.

And with Mrs. Elvsted.

Lövborg.

Ah— [Lightly.] I saw her for a moment this morning.

Hedda.

Did you? Well, she is coming this evening. So you see you are almost bound to remain, Mr. Lövborg, or she will have no one to see her home.

Lövborg.

That's true. Many thanks, Mrs. Tesman—in that case I will remain.

Hedda.

Then I have one or two orders to give the servant—

[She goes to the hall door and rings. Berta enters.]
Hedda talks to her in a whisper, and points towards the inner room. Berta nods and goes out again.

Tesman.

[At the same time, to Lövborg.] Tell me, Eilert—is it this new subject—the future—that you are going to lecture about?

Lövborg.

Yes.

Tesman.

They told me at the bookseller's that you are going to deliver a course of lectures this autumn.

Lövborg.

That is my intention. I hope you won't take it ill, Tesman.

Tesman.

Oh no, not in the least! But—?

Lövborg.

I can quite understand that it must be disagreeable to you.

Tesman.

[Cast down.] Oh, I can't expect you, out of consideration for me, to——

Lövborg.

But I shall wait till you have received your appointment.
TESMAN.

Will you wait? Yes but—yes but—are you not going to compete with me? Eh?

LÖVBORG.

No; it is only the moral victory I care for.

TESMAN.

Why, bless me—then Aunt Julia was right after all! Oh yes—I knew it! Hedda! Just fancy—Eilert Lövborg is not going to stand in our way!

HEDDA.

[Curtly.] Our way? Pray leave me out of the question.

[She goes up towards the inner room, where BERTA is placing a tray with decanters and glasses on the table. HEDDA nods approval, and comes forward again. BERTA goes out.

TESMAN.

[At the same time.] And you, Judge Brack—what do you say to this? Eh?

BRACK.

Well, I say that a moral victory—h’m—may be all very fine——

TESMAN.

Yes, certainly. But all the same——
HEDDA.

[Looking at Tesman with a cold smile.] You stand there looking as if you were thunder-struck——

TESMAN.

Yes—so I am—I almost think——

BRACK.

Don’t you see, Mrs. Tesman, a thunderstorm has just passed over?

HEDDA.

[Pointing towards the inner room.] Will you not take a glass of cold punch, gentlemen?

BRACK.

[Looking at his watch.] A stirrup-cup? Yes, it wouldn’t come amiss.

TESMAN.

A capital idea, Hedda! Just the thing! Now that the weight has been taken off my mind——

HEDDA.

Will you not join them, Mr. Lövborg?

LÖVBORG.

[With a gesture of refusal.] No, thank you. Nothing for me.

BRACK.

Why bless me—cold punch is surely not poison.
Lövborg.

Perhaps not for every one.

Hedda.

I will keep Mr. Lövborg company in the meantime.

Tesman.

Yes, yes, Hedda dear, do.

[He and Brack go into the inner room, sit themselves, drink punch, smoke cigarettes, and carry on a lively conversation during what follows. Eilert Lövborg remains standing beside the stove. Hedda goes to the writing-table.

Hedda.

[Raising her voice a little.] Do you care to look at some photographs, Mr. Lövborg? You know Tesman and I made a tour in the Tyrol on our way home?

[She takes up an album, and places it on the table beside the sofa, in the further corner of which she seats herself. Eilert Lövborg approaches, stops, and looks at her. Then he takes a chair and seats himself to her left, with his back towards the inner room.

Hedda.

[Opening the album.] Do you see this range of mountains, Mr. Lövborg? It's the Ortler group. Tesman has written the name underneath. Here it is: "The Ortler group near Meran."
Lövborg.

[Who has never taken his eyes off her, says softly and slowly:] Hedda—Gabler!

Hedda.

[Glancing hastily at him.] Ah! Hush!

Lövborg.

[Repeats softly.] Hedda Gabler!

Hedda.

[Looking at the album.] That was my name in the old days—when we two knew each other.

Lövborg.

And I must teach myself never to say Hedda Gabler again—never, as long as I live.

Hedda.

[Still turning over the pages.] Yes, you must. And I think you ought to practise in time. The sooner the better, I should say.

Lövborg.

[In a tone of indignation.] Hedda Gabler married? And married to—George Tesman!

Hedda.

Yes—so the world goes.
LÖVBORG.

Oh, Hedda, Hedda—how could you\(^1\) throw yourself away!

HEDDA.

[Looks sharply at him.] What? I can’t allow this!

LÖVBORG.

What do you mean?

[TESMAN comes into the room and goes towards the sofa.

HEDDA.

[Heard him coming and says in an indifferent tone.] And this is a view from the Val d’Ampezzo, Mr. Lövborg. Just look at these peaks! [Looks affectionately up at TESMAN.] What’s the name of these curious peaks, dear?

TESMAN.

Let me see. Oh, those are the Dolomites.

HEDDA.

Yes, that’s it!—Those are the Dolomites, Mr. Lövborg.

TESMAN.

Hedda dear,—I only wanted to ask whether I shouldn’t bring you a little punch after all? For yourself at any rate—eh?

HEDDA.

Yes, do, please; and perhaps a few biscuits.

\(^1\) He uses the familiar du.
No cigarettes?

HEDDA.

No.

TESMAN.

Very well.

[He goes into the inner room and out to the right. Brack sits in the inner room, and keeps an eye from time to time on HEDDA and LöVBORG.

LOVBORG.

[Softly, as before.] Answer me, Hedda—how could you go and do this?

HEDDA.

[Apparently absorbed in the album.] If you continue to say du to me I won’t talk to you.

LOVBORG.

May I not say du even when we are alone?

HEDDA.

No. You may think it; but you mustn’t say it.

LOVBORG.

Ah, I understand. It is an offence against George Tesman, whom you¹—love.

HEDDA.

[Glances at him and smiles.] Love? What an idea!

LOVBORG.
You don't love him then!

HEDDA.
But I won't hear of any sort of unfaithfulness! Remember that.

LOVBORG.
Hedda—answer me one thing—

HEDDA.
Hush!

TESMAN enters with a small tray from the inner room.

TESMAN.
Here you are! Isn't this tempting?

[He puts the tray on the table.]

HEDDA.
Why do you bring it yourself?

TESMAN.
[Filling the glasses.] Because I think it's such fun to wait upon you, Hedda.

HEDDA.
But you have poured out two glasses. Mr. Lövborg said he wouldn't have any——

TESMAN.
No, but Mrs. Elvsted will soon be here, won't she?
HEDDA.

Yes, by-the-bye—Mrs. Elvsted—

TESMAN.

Had you forgotten her? Eh?

HEDDA.

We were so absorbed in these photographs. [Shows him a picture.] Do you remember this little village?

TESMAN.

Oh, it's that one just below the Brenner Pass. It was there we passed the night—

HEDDA.

—and met that lively party of tourists.

TESMAN.

Yes, that was the place. Fancy—if we could only have had you with us, Eilert! Eh?

[He returns to the inner room and sits beside Brack.

LÖVBORG.

Answer me this one thing, Hedda—

HEDDA.

Well?

LÖVBORG.

Was there no love in your friendship for me either? Not a spark—not a tinge of love in it?
Hedda.

I wonder if there was? To me it seems as though we were two good comrades—two thoroughly intimate friends. [Smilingly.] You especially were frankness itself.

Lövborg.

It was you that made me so.

Hedda.

As I look back upon it all, I think there was really something beautiful, something fascinating—something daring—in—in that secret intimacy—that comradeship which no living creature so much as dreamed of.

Lövborg.

Yes, yes, Hedda! Was there not?—When I used to come to your father's in the afternoon—and the General sat over at the window reading his papers—with his back towards us—

Hedda.

And we two on the corner sofa—

Lövborg.

Always with the same illustrated paper before us—

Hedda.

For want of an album, yes.

Lövborg.

Yes, Hedda, and when I made my confessions to you—told you about myself, things that at that time no one else knew! There I would sit and tell you of my escapades—my days and nights of devilment. Oh, Hedda—what was the power in you that forced me to confess these things?

HEDDA.

Do you think it was any power in me?

LÖVBORG.

How else can I explain it? And all those—those roundabout questions you used to put to me—

HEDDA.

Which you understood so particularly well—

LÖVBORG.

How could you sit and question me like that? Question me quite frankly—

HEDDA.

In roundabout terms, please observe.

LÖVBORG.

Yes, but frankly nevertheless. Cross-question me about—all that sort of thing?

HEDDA.

And how could you answer, Mr. Lövborg?

LÖVBORG.

Yes, that is just what I can’t understand—in looking back upon it. But tell me now, Hedda—was there not love at the bottom of our friendship? On your side, did you not feel as though you might purge my stains away—if I made you my confessor? Was it not so?

Hedda.

No, not quite.

Lövborg.

What was your motive, then?

Hedda.

Do you think it quite incomprehensible that a young girl—when it can be done—without any one knowing—

Lövborg.

Well?

Hedda.

—should be glad to have a peep, now and then, into a world which—

Lövborg.

Which—?

Hedda.

—which she is forbidden to know anything about?

Lövborg.

So that was it?

Hedda.

Partly. Partly—I almost think.

Lövborg.

Comradeship in the thirst for life. But why should not that, at any rate, have continued?
HEDDA.
The fault was yours.

LÖVBORG.
It was you that broke with me.

HEDDA.
Yes, when our friendship threatened to develop into something more serious. Shame upon you, Eilert Løvborg! How could you think of wronging your—your frank comrade?

LÖVBORG.
[Clenching his hands.] Oh, why did you not carry out your threat? Why did you not shoot me down?

HEDDA.
Because I have such a dread of scandal.

LÖVBORG.
Yes, Hedda, you are a coward at heart.

HEDDA.
A terrible coward. [Changing her tone.] But it was a lucky thing for you. And now you have found ample consolation at the Elvsteds'.

LÖVBORG.
I know what Thea has confided to you.

HEDDA.
And perhaps you have confided to her something about us?
Lövborg.

Not a word. She is too stupid to understand anything of that sort.

Hedda.

Stupid?

Lövborg.

She is stupid about matters of that sort.

Hedda.

And I am cowardly. [Bends over towards him, without looking him in the face, and says more softly:] But now I will confide something to you.

Lövborg.

[Eagerly.] Well?

Hedda.

The fact that I dared not shoot you down——

Lövborg.

Yes!

Hedda.

—that was not my most arrant cowardice—that evening.

Lövborg.

[Looks at her a moment, understands, and whispers passionately.] Oh, Hedda! Hedda Gabler! Now I begin to see a hidden reason beneath our comradeship! You¹ and I——! After all, then, it was your craving for life——

¹ In this speech he once more says du. Hedda addresses him throughout as De.
HEDDA GABLER

HEDDA.

[Softly, with a sharp glance.] Take care! Believe nothing of the sort!

[Twilight has begun to fall. The hall door is opened from without by BERTA.

HEDDA.

[Closes the album with a bang and calls smilingly:] Ah, at last! My darling Thea,—come along!

MRS. ELVSTED enters from the hall. She is in evening dress. The door is closed behind her.

HEDDA.

[On the sofa, stretches out her arms towards her.] My sweet Thea—you can’t think how I have been longing for you!

[MRS. ELVSTED, in passing, exchanges slight salutations with the gentlemen in the inner room, then goes up to the table and gives HEDDA her hand. EILERT LöVBORG has risen. He and MRS. ELVSTED greet each other with a silent nod.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Ought I to go in and talk to your husband for a moment?

HEDDA.

Oh, not at all. Leave those two alone. They will soon be going.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Are they going out?
ACT II

HEDDA GABLER

HEDDA.

Yes, to a supper-party.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Quickly, to Lövborg.] Not you?

LÖVBORG.

No.

HEDDA.

Mr. Lövborg remains with us.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Takes a chair and is about to seat herself at his side.] Oh, how nice it is here!

HEDDA.

No, thank you, my little Thea! Not there! You'll be good enough to come over here to me. I will sit between you.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, just as you please.

[She goes round the table and seats herself on the sofa on Hedda's right. Lövborg re-seats himself on his chair.

LÖVBORG.

[After a short pause, to Hedda.] Is not she lovely to look at?

HEDDA.

[Lightly stroking her hair.] Only to look at?
Lövborg.

Yes. For we two—she and I—we are two real comrades. We have absolute faith in each other; so we can sit and talk with perfect frankness——

Hedda.

Not round about, Mr. Lövborg?

Lövborg.

Well——

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Softly clining close to Hedda.] Oh, how happy I am, Hedda! For, only think, he says I have inspired him too!

Hedda.

[Looks at her with a smile.] Ah! Does he say that, dear?

Lövborg.

And then she is so brave, Mrs. Tesman!

Mrs. Elvsted.

Good heavens—am I brave?

Lövborg.

Exceedingly—where your comrade is concerned.

Hedda.

Ah yes—courage! If one only had that!
Lövborg.

What then? What do you mean?

Hedda.

Then life would perhaps be liveable, after all. [With a sudden change of tone.] But now, my dearest Thea, you really must have a glass of cold punch.

Mrs. Elvsted.

No, thanks—I never take anything of that kind.

Hedda.

Well then, you, Mr. Lövborg.

Lövborg.

Nor I, thank you.

Mrs. Elvsted.

No, he doesn’t either.

Hedda.

[Looks fixedly at him.] But if I say you shall?

Lövborg.

It would be no use.

Hedda.

[Laughing.] Then I, poor creature, have no sort of power over you?

Lövborg.

Not in that respect.
HEDDA GABLER

HEDDA.

But seriously, I think you ought to—for your own sake.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Why, Hedda——!

LOVBORG.

How so?

HEDDA.

Or rather on account of other people.

LOVBORG.

Indeed?

HEDDA.

Otherwise people might be apt to suspect that—in your heart of hearts—you did not feel quite secure—quite confident in yourself.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Softly.] Oh please, Hedda——!

LOVBORG.

People may suspect what they like—for the present.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Joyfully.] Yes, let them!

HEDDA.

I saw it plainly in Judge Brack's face a moment ago.
Lövborg.

What did you see?

Hedda.

His contemptuous smile, when you dared not go with them into the inner room.

Lövborg.

Dared not? Of course I preferred to stop here and talk to you.

Mrs. Elvsted.

What could be more natural, Hedda?

Hedda.

But the Judge could not guess that. And I saw, too, the way he smiled and glanced at Tesman when you dared not accept his invitation to this wretched little supper-party of his.

Lövborg.

Dared not! Do you say I dared not?

Hedda.

I don't say so. But that was how Judge Brack understood it.

Lövborg.

Well, let him.

Hedda.

Then you are not going with them?
Lövborg.
I will stay here with you and Thea.

Mrs. Elvsted.
Yes, Hedda—how can you doubt that?

Hedda.
[Smiles and nods approvingly to Lövborg.] Firm as a rock! Faithful to your principles, now and for ever! Ah, that is how a man should be! [Turns to Mrs. Elvsted and caresses her.] Well now, what did I tell you, when you came to us this morning in such a state of distraction—

Lövborg.
[Surprised.] Distraction!

Mrs. Elvsted.
[Terrified.] Hedda—oh Hedda—!

Hedda.
You can see for yourself! You haven’t the slightest reason to be in such mortal terror— [Interrupting herself.] There! Now we can all three enjoy ourselves.

Lövborg.
[Who has given a start.] Ah—what is all this, Mrs. Tesman?

Mrs. Elvsted.
Oh my God, Hedda! What are you saying? What are you doing?
Hedda.

Don’t get excited! That horrid Judge Brack is sitting watching you.

Lövborg.

So she was in mortal terror! On my account!

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Softly and piteously.] Oh, Hedda—now you have ruined everything!

Lövborg.

[Looks fixedly at her for a moment. His face is distorted.] So that was my comrade’s frank confidence in me?

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Imploringly.] Oh, my dearest friend—only let me tell you——

Lövborg.

[Takes one of the glasses of punch, raises it to his lips, and says in a low, husky voice.] Your health, Thea! [He empties the glass, puts it down, and takes the second.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Softly.] Oh, Hedda, Hedda—how could you do this?

Hedda.

I do it? I? Are you crazy?
HEDDA GABLER [ACT II

LÖVBORG.

Here's to your health too, Mrs. Tesman. Thanks for the truth. Hurrah for the truth!

[He empties the glass and is about to re-fill it.

HEDDA.

[Lays her hand on his arm.] Come, come—no more for the present. Remember you are going out to supper.

MRS. EIVSTED.

No, no, no!

HEDDA.

Hush! They are sitting watching you.

LÖVBORG.

[Putting down the glass.] Now, Thea—tell me the truth—

MRS. EIVSTED.

Yes.

LÖVBORG.

Did your husband know that you had come after me?

MRS. EIVSTED.

[Wringing her hands.] Oh, Hedda—do you hear what he is asking?

LÖVBORG.

Was it arranged between you and him that you were to come to town and look after me? Perhaps it was the Sheriff himself that urged you to come? Aha, my dear —no doubt he wanted my help in his office! Or was it at the card-table that he missed me?

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Softly, in agony.] Oh, Lövborg, Lövborg—!

Lövborg.

[Seizes a glass and is on the point of filling it.] Here’s a glass for the old Sheriff too!

Hedda.

[Preventing him.] No more just now. Remember, you have to read your manuscript to Tesman.

Lövborg.

[Calmly, putting down the glass.] It was stupid of me all this, Thea—to take it in this way, I mean. Don’t be angry with me, my dear, dear comrade. You shall see—both you and the others—that if I was fallen once—now I have risen again! Thanks to you, Thea.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Radiant with joy.] Oh, heaven be praised—!

[Brack has in the meantime looked at his watch. He and Tesman rise and come into the drawing-room.

Brack.

[Takes his hat and overcoat.] Well, Mrs. Tesman, our time has come.

Hedda.

I suppose it has.
Lövborg.

[Rising.] Mine too, Judge Brack.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Softly and imploringly.] Oh, Lövborg, don’t do it!

Hedda.

[Pinching her arm.] They can hear you!

Mrs. Elvsted.

[With a suppressed shriek.] Ow!

Lövborg.

[To Brack.] You were good enough to invite me.

Brack.

Well, are you coming after all?

Lövborg.

Yes, many thanks.

Brack.

I’m delighted——

Lövborg.

[To Tesman, putting the parcel of MS. in his pocket.] I should like to show you one or two things before I send it to the printers.

Tesman.

Fancy—that will be delightful. But, Hedda dear, how is Mrs. Elvsted to get home? Eh?
Hedda.
Oh, that can be managed somehow.

Lövborg.
[Looking towards the ladies.] Mrs. Elvsted? Of course, I'll come again and fetch her. [Approaching.] At ten or thereabouts, Mrs. Tesman? Will that do?

Hedda.
Certainly. That will do capitally.

Tesman.
Well, then, that's all right. But you must not expect me so early, Hedda.

Hedda.
Oh, you may stop as long—as long as ever you please.

Mrs. Elvsted.
[Trying to conceal her anxiety.] Well then, Mr. Lövborg—I shall remain here until you come.

Lövborg.
[With his hat in his hand.] Pray do, Mrs. Elvsted.

Brack.
And now off goes the excursion train, gentlemen! I hope we shall have a lively time, as a certain fair lady puts it.

Hedda.
Ah, if only the fair lady could be present unseen——!
Brack.

Why unseen?

Hedda.

In order to hear a little of your liveliness at first hand, Judge Brack.

Brack.

[Laughing.] I should not advise the fair lady to try it.

Tesman.

[Also laughing.] Come, you're a nice one, Hedda! Fancy that!

Brack.

Well, good-bye, good-bye, ladies.

Lövborg.

[Bowing.] About ten o'clock, then.

[Brack, Lövborg, and Tesman go out by the hall door. At the same time, Berta enters from the inner room with a lighted lamp, which she places on the drawing-room table; she goes out by the way she came.]

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Who has risen and is wandering restlessly about the room.] Hedda—Hedda—what will come of all this?

Hedda.

At ten o'clock—he will be here. I can see him already—with vine-leaves in his hair—flushed and fearless——
Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, I hope he may.

Hedda.

And then, you see—then he will have regained control over himself. Then he will be a free man for all his days.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh God!—if he would only come as you see him now!

Hedda.

He will come as I see him—so, and not otherwise! [Rises and approaches Thea.] You may doubt him as long as you please; I believe in him. And now we will try——

Mrs. Elvsted.

You have some hidden motive in this, Hedda!

Hedda.

Yes, I have. I want for once in my life to have power to mould a human destiny.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Have you not the power?

Hedda.

I have not—and have never had it.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Not your husband's?
HEDDA.

Do you think that is worth the trouble? Oh, if you could only understand how poor I am. And fate has made you so rich! [Clasps her passionately in her arms.] I think I must burn your hair off, after all.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Let me go! Let me go! I am afraid of you, Hedda!

BERTA.

[In the middle doorway.] Tea is laid in the dining-room, ma'am.

HEDDA.

Very well. We are coming.

MRS. ELVSTED.

No, no, no! I would rather go home alone! At once!

HEDDA.

Nonsense! First you shall have a cup of tea, you little stupid. And then—at ten o'clock—Eilert Lövborg will be here—with vine-leaves in his hair.

[She drag s MRS. ELVSTED almost by force towards the middle doorway.]
ACT THIRD

The room at the Tesmans. The curtains are drawn over the middle doorway, and also over the glass door. The lamp, half turned down, and with a shade over it, is burning on the table. In the stove, the door of which stands open, there has been a fire, which is now nearly burnt out.

Mrs. Elvsted, wrapped in a large shawl, and with her feet upon a foot-rest, sits close to the stove, sunk back in the arm-chair. Hedda, fully dressed, lies sleeping upon the sofa, with a sofa-blanket over her.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[After a pause, suddenly sits up in her chair, and listens eagerly. Then she sinks back again wearily, moaning to herself.] Not yet!—Oh God—oh God—not yet!

Berta slips cautiously in by the hall door. She has a letter in her hand.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Turns and whispers eagerly.] Well—has any one come?

Berta.

[Softly.] Yes, a girl has just brought this letter.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Quickly, holding out her hand.] A letter! Give it to me!
BERTA.

No, it's for Dr. Tesman, ma'am.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, indeed.

BERTA.

It was Miss Tesman's servant that brought it. I'll lay it here on the table.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, do.

BERTA.

[Laying down the letter.] I think I had better put out the lamp. It's smoking.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, put it out. It must soon be daylight now.

BERTA.

[Putting out the lamp.] It is daylight already, ma'am.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, broad day! And no one come back yet——!

BERTA.

Lord bless you, ma'am—I guessed how it would be.

MRS. ELVSTED.

You guessed?
ACT III] HEDDA GABLER 149

BERTA.

Yes, when I saw that a certain person had come back to town—and that he went off with them. For we've heard enough about that gentleman before now.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Don't speak so loud. You will waken Mrs. Tesman.

BERTA.

[Looks towards the sofa and sighs.] No, no—let her sleep, poor thing. Shan't I put some wood on the fire?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Thanks, not for me.

BERTA.

Oh, very well. [She goes softly out by the hall door.

HEDDA.

[Is wakened by the shutting of the door, and looks up.] What's that——?

MRS. ELVSTED.

It was only the servant——

HEDDA.

[Looking about her.] Oh, we're here——! Yes, now I remember. [Sits erect upon the sofa, stretches herself, and rubs her eyes.] What o'clock is it, Thea?
[Act III]

Mrs. Elvsted.
[Looks at her watch.]  It's past seven.

Hedda.
When did Tesman come home?

Mrs. Elvsted.
He has not come.

Hedda.
Not come home yet?

Mrs. Elvsted.
[Rising.]  No one has come.

Hedda.
Think of our watching and waiting here till four in the morning——

Mrs. Elvsted.
[Wringing her hands.]  And how I watched and waited for him!

Hedda.
[Yawns, and says with her hand before her mouth.]  Well well—we might have spared ourselves the trouble.

Mrs. Elvsted.
Did you get a little sleep?

Hedda.
Oh yes; I believe I have slept pretty well.  Have you not?
MRS. ELVSTED.

Not for a moment. I couldn't, Hedda!—not to save my life.

HEDDA.

[Rises and goes towards her.] There, there, there! There's nothing to be so alarmed about. I understand quite well what has happened.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Well, what do you think? Won't you tell me?

HEDDA.

Why, of course it has been a very late affair at Judge Brack's——

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, yes—that is clear enough. But all the same——

HEDDA.

And then, you see, Tesman hasn't cared to come home and ring us up in the middle of the night. [Laughing.] Perhaps he wasn't inclined to show himself either—immediately after a jollification.

MRS. ELVSTED.

But in that case—where can he have gone?

HEDDA.

Of course he has gone to his Aunts' and slept there. They have his old room ready for him.
Mrs. Elvsted.

No, he can’t be with them; for a letter has just come for him from Miss Tesman. There it lies.

Hedda.

Indeed? [Looks at the address.] Why yes, it’s addressed in Aunt Julia’s own hand. Well then, he has remained at Judge Brack’s. And as for Eilert Lövborg—he is sitting, with vine-leaves in his hair, reading his manuscript.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh Hedda, you are just saying things you don’t believe a bit.

Hedda.

You really are a little blockhead, Thea.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh yes, I suppose I am.

Hedda.

And how mortally tired you look.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, I am mortally tired.

Hedda.

Well then, you must do as I tell you. You must go into my room and lie down for a little while.
Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh no, no—I shouldn’t be able to sleep.

Hedda.

I am sure you would.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Well, but your husband is certain to come soon now; and then I want to know at once——

Hedda.

I shall take care to let you know when he comes.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Do you promise me, Hedda?

Hedda.

Yes, rely upon me. Just you go in and have a sleep in the meantime.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Thanks; then I’ll try to.

[She goes off through the inner room.]

[Hedda goes up to the glass door and draws back the curtains. The broad daylight streams into the room. Then she takes a little hand-glass from the writing-table, looks at herself in it, and arranges her hair. Next she goes to the hall door and presses the bell-button.

Berta presently appears at the hall door.
BERTA.

Did you want anything, ma'am?

HEDDA.

Yes; you must put some more wood in the stove. I am shivering.

BERTA.

Bless me—I'll make up the fire at once. [She rakes the embers together and lays a piece of wood upon them; then stops and listens.] That was a ring at the front door, ma'am.

HEDDA.

Then go to the door. I will look after the fire.

BERTA.

It'll soon burn up. [She goes out by the hall door. [HEDDA kneels on the foot-rest and lays some more pieces of wood in the stove.

After a short pause, GEORGE TESMAN enters from the hall. He looks tired and rather serious. He steals on tip-toe towards the middle doorway and is about to slip through the curtains.

HEDDA.

[At the stove, without looking up.] Good morning.

TESMAN.

[Turns.] Hedda! [Approaching her.] Good heavens—are you up so early? Eh?
Hedda.

Yes, I am up very early this morning.

Tesman.

And I never doubted you were still sound asleep! Fancy that, Hedda!

Hedda.

Don’t speak so loud. Mrs. Elvsted is resting in my room.

Tesman.

Has Mrs. Elvsted been here all night?

Hedda.

Yes, since no one came to fetch her.

Tesman.

Ah, to be sure.

Hedda.

[Closes the door of the stove and rises.] Well, did you enjoy yourselves at Judge Brack’s?

Tesman.

Have you been anxious about me? Eh?

Hedda.

No, I should never think of being anxious. But I asked if you had enjoyed yourself.
HEDDA.

[Seating herself by the table on the right.] Well? Tell me, then——

TESMAN.

[Sitting on a footstool near the stove.] Oh Hedda, you can't conceive what a book that is going to be! I believe it is one of the most remarkable things that have ever been written. Fancy that!

HEDDA.

Yes yes; I don't care about that——

TESMAN.

I must make a confession to you, Hedda. When he had finished reading—a horrid feeling came over me.

HEDDA.

A horrid feeling?

TESMAN.

I felt jealous of Eilert for having had it in him to write such a book. Only think, Hedda!

HEDDA.

Yes, yes, I am thinking!
And then how pitiful to think that he—with all his gifts—should be irreclaimable, after all.

I suppose you mean that he has more courage than the rest?

No, not at all—I mean that he is incapable of taking his pleasures in moderation.

And what came of it all—in the end?

Well, to tell the truth, I think it might best be described as an orgy, Hedda.

Had he vine-leaves in his hair?

Vine-leaves? No, I saw nothing of the sort. But he made a long, rambling speech in honour of the woman who had inspired him in his work—that was the phrase he used.

Did he name her?

No, he didn’t; but I can’t help thinking he meant Mrs. Elvsted. You may be sure he did.
HEDDA GABLER

HEDDA.

Well—where did you part from him?

TESMAN.

On the way to town. We broke up—the last of us at any rate—all together; and Brack came with us to get a breath of fresh air. And then, you see, we agreed to take Eilert home; for he had had far more than was good for him.

HEDDA.

I daresay.

TESMAN.

But now comes the strange part of it, Hedda; or, I should rather say, the melancholy part of it. I declare I am almost ashamed—on Eilert's account—to tell you——

HEDDA.

Oh, go on——!

TESMAN.

Well, as we were getting near town, you see, I happened to drop a little behind the others. Only for a minute or two—fancy that!

HEDDA.

Yes, yes, yes, but——?

TESMAN.

And then, as I hurried after them—what do you think I found by the wayside? Eh?
Hedda.

Oh, how should I know!

Tesman.

You mustn't speak of it to a soul, Hedda! Do you hear! Promise me, for Eilert's sake. [Draws a parcel, wrapped in paper, from his coat pocket.] Fancy, dear—I found this.

Hedda.

Is not that the parcel he had with him yesterday?

Tesman.

Yes, it is the whole of his precious, irreplaceable manuscript! And he had gone and lost it, and knew nothing about it. Only fancy, Hedda! So deplorably——

Hedda.

But why did you not give him back the parcel at once?

Tesman.

I didn't dare to—in the state he was then in——

Hedda.

Did you not tell any of the others that you had found it?

Tesman.

Oh, far from it! You can surely understand that, for Eilert's sake, I wouldn't do that.
HEDDA.

So no one knows that Eilert Lövborg’s manuscript is in your possession?

TESMAN.

No. And no one must know it.

HEDDA.

Then what did you say to him afterwards?

TESMAN.

I didn’t talk to him again at all; for when we got in among the streets, he and two or three of the others gave us the slip and disappeared. Fancy that!

HEDDA.

Indeed! They must have taken him home then.

TESMAN.

Yes, so it would appear. And Brack, too, left us.

HEDDA.

And what have you been doing with yourself since?

TESMAN.

Well, I and some of the others went home with one of the party, a jolly fellow, and took our morning coffee with him; or perhaps I should rather call it our night coffee—eh? But now, when I have rested a little, and given Eilert, poor fellow, time to have his sleep out, I must take this back to him.
Hedda.

[Holds out her hand for the packet.] No—don't give it to him! Not in such a hurry, I mean. Let me read it first.

Tesman.

No, my dearest Hedda, I mustn't, I really mustn't.

Hedda.

You must not?

Tesman.

No—for you can imagine what a state of despair he will be in when he wakens and misses the manuscript. He has no copy of it, you must know! He told me so.

Hedda.

[Looking searchingly at him.] Can such a thing not be reproduced? Written over again?

Tesman.

No, I don't think that would be possible. For the inspiration, you see——

Hedda.

Yes, yes—I suppose it depends on that——[Lightly.] But, by-the-bye—here is a letter for you.

Tesman.

Fancy——!

Hedda.

[Handing it to him.] It came early this morning.
Tesan.

It's from Aunt Julia! What can it be? [He lays the packet on the other footstool, opens the letter, runs his eye through it, and jumps up.] Oh, Hedda—she says that poor Aunt Rina is dying!

Hedda.

Well, we were prepared for that.

Tesan.

And that if I want to see her again, I must make haste. I'll run in to them at once.

Hedda.

[Suppressing a smile.] Will you run?

Tesan.

Oh, my dearest Hedda—if you could only make up your mind to come with me! Just think!

Hedda.

[Rises and says wearily, repelling the idea.] No, no, don't ask me. I will not look upon sickness and death. I loathe all sorts of ugliness.

Tesan.

Well, well, then—! [Bustling around.] My hat—? My overcoat—? Oh, in the hall—. I do hope I mayn't come too late, Hedda! Eh?
HEDDA.

Oh, if you run—

[BERTA appears at the hall door.

BERTA.

Judge Brack is at the door, and wishes to know if he may come in.

TESMAN.

At this time! No, I can’t possibly see him.

HEDDA.

But I can. [To BERTA.] Ask Judge Brack to come in. [BERTA goes out.

HEDDA.

[Quickly, whispering.] The parcel, Tesman! [She snatches it up from the stool.

TESMAN.

Yes, give it to me!

HEDDA.

No, no, I will keep it till you come back. [She goes to the writing-table and places it in the book-case. TESMAN stands in a flurry of haste, and cannot get his gloves on.

JUDGE BRACK enters from the hall.

HEDDA.

[Nodding to him.] You are an early bird, I must say.
Brack.

Yes, don't you think so? [To Tesman.] Are you on the move, too?

Tesman.

Yes, I must rush off to my aunts'. Fancy—the invalid one is lying at death's door, poor creature.

Brack.

Dear me, is she indeed? Then on no account let me detain you. At such a critical moment——

Tesman.

Yes, I must really rush—— Good-bye! Good-bye! [He hastens out by the hall door.

Hedda.

[Approaching.] You seem to have made a particularly lively night of it at your rooms, Judge Brack.

Brack.

I assure you I have not had my clothes off, Mrs. Hedda.

Hedda.

Not you, either?

Brack.

No, as you may see. But what has Tesman been telling you of the night's adventures?

Hedda.

Oh, some tiresome story. Only that they went and had coffee somewhere or other.
Brack.

I have heard about that coffee-party already. Eilert Lövborg was not with them, I fancy?

Hedda.

No, they had taken him home before that.

Brack.

Tesman too?

Hedda.

No, but some of the others, he said.

Brack.

[Smiling.] George Tesman is really an ingenuous creature, Mrs. Hedda.

Hedda.

Yes, heaven knows he is. Then is there something behind all this?

Brack.

Yes, perhaps there may be.

Hedda.

Well then, sit down, my dear Judge, and tell your story in comfort.

[She seats herself to the left of the table. Brack sits near her, at the long side of the table.

Hedda.

Now then?
Brack.

I had special reasons for keeping track of my guests—or rather of some of my guests—last night.

Hedda.

Of Eilert Lövborg among the rest, perhaps?

Brack.

Frankly—yes.

Hedda.

Now you make me really curious——

Brack.

Do you know where he and one or two of the others finished the night, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.

If it is not quite unmentionable, tell me

Brack.

Oh no, it's not at all unmentionable. Well, they put in an appearance at a particularly animated soirée.

Hedda.

Of the lively kind?

Brack.

Of the very liveliest——

Hedda.

Tell me more of this, Judge Brack——
Lövborg, as well as the others, had been invited in advance. I knew all about it. But he had declined the invitation; for now, as you know, he has become a new man.

Hedda.

Up at the Elvsted's, yes. But he went after all, then?

Brack.

Well, you see, Mrs. Hedda—unhappily the spirit moved him at my rooms last evening—

Hedda.

Yes, I hear he found inspiration.

Brack.

Pretty violent inspiration. Well, I fancy that altered his purpose; for we menfolk are unfortunately not always so firm in our principles as we ought to be.

Hedda.

Oh, I am sure you are an exception, Judge Brack. But as to Lövborg—?

Brack.

To make a long story short—he landed at last in Mademoiselle Diana's rooms.

Hedda.

Mademoiselle Diana's?
It was Mademoiselle Diana that was giving the soirée to a select circle of her admirers and her lady friends.

Is she a red-haired woman?

Precisely.

A sort of a—singer?

Oh yes—in her leisure moments. And moreover a mighty huntress—of men—Mrs. Hedda. You have no doubt heard of her. Eilert Lövborg was one of her most enthusiastic protectors—in the days of his glory.

And how did all this end?

Far from amicably, it appears. After a most tender meeting, they seem to have come to blows—

Lövborg and she?

Yes. He accused her or her friends of having robbed him. He declared that his pocket-book had disappeared—and other things as well. In short, he seems to have made a furious disturbance.
Hedda.

And what came of it all?

Brack.

It came to a general scrimmage, in which the ladies as well as the gentlemen took part. Fortunately the police at last appeared on the scene.

Hedda.

The police too?

Brack.

Yes. I fancy it will prove a costly frolic for Eilert Lövborg, crazy being that he is.

Hedda.

How so?

Brack.

He seems to have made a violent resistance—to have hit one of the constables on the head and torn the coat off his back. So they had to march him off to the police-station with the rest.

Hedda.

How have you learnt all this?

Brack.

From the police themselves.

Hedda.

[Gazing straight before her.] So that is what happened. Then he had no vine-leaves in his hair.
Brack.

Vine-leaves, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.

[Changing her tone.] But tell me now, Judge—what is your real reason for tracking out Eilert Lövborg's movements so carefully?

Brack.

In the first place, it could not be entirely indifferent to me if it should appear in the police-court that he came straight from my house.

Hedda.

Will the matter come into court then?

Brack.

Of course. However, I should scarcely have troubled so much about that. But I thought that, as a friend of the family, it was my duty to supply you and Tesman with a full account of his nocturnal exploits.

Hedda.

Why so, Judge Brack?

Brack.

Why, because I have a shrewd suspicion that he intends to use you as a sort of blind.

Hedda.

Oh, how can you think such a thing!
Brack.

Good heavens, Mrs. Hedda—we have eyes in our head. Mark my words! This Mrs. Elvsted will be in no hurry to leave town again.

Hedda.

Well, even if there should be anything between them, I suppose there are plenty of other places where they could meet.

Brack.

Not a single home. Henceforth, as before, every respectable house will be closed against Eilert Lövborg.

Hedda.

And so ought mine to be, you mean?

Brack.

Yes. I confess it would be more than painful to me if this personage were to be made free of your house. How superfluous, how intrusive, he would be, if he were to force his way into——

Hedda.

——into the triangle?

Brack.

Precisely. It would simply mean that I should find myself homeless.

Hedda.

[Looks at him with a smile.] So you want to be the one cock in the basket\(^1\)—that is your aim.

\(^1\)"Eneste hane i kurven"—a proverbial saying.
[Nods slowly and lowers his voice.] Yes, that is my aim. And for that I will fight—with every weapon I can command.

Hedda.

[Her smile vanishing.] I see you are a dangerous person—when it comes to the point.

Brack.

Do you think so?

Hedda.

I am beginning to think so. And I am exceedingly glad to think—that you have no sort of hold over me.

Brack.

[Laughing equivocally.] Well, well, Mrs. Hedda—perhaps you are right there. If I had, who knows what I might be capable of?

Hedda.

Come come now, Judge Brack! That sounds almost like a threat.

Brack.

[Rising.] Oh, not at all! The triangle, you know, ought, if possible, to be spontaneously constructed.

Hedda.

There I agree with you.
Brack.

Well, now I have said all I had to say; and I had better be getting back to town. Good-bye, Mrs. Hedda.

[He goes towards the glass door.

Hedda.

[Rising.] Are you going through the garden?

Brack.

Yes, it’s a short cut for me.

Hedda.

And then it is a back way, too.

Brack.

Quite so. I have no objection to back ways. They may be piquant enough at times.

Hedda.

When there is ball practice going on, you mean?

Brack.

[In the doorway, laughing to her.] Oh, people don’t shoot their tame poultry, I fancy.

Hedda.

[Also laughing.] Oh no, when there is only one cock in the basket—

[They exchange laughing nods of farewell. He goes.
She closes the door behind him.

[Hedda, who has become quite serious, stands for a moment looking out. Presently she goes and peeps] through the curtain over the middle doorway. Then she goes to the writing-table, takes Lövborg's packet out of the bookcase, and is on the point of looking through its contents. Berta is heard speaking loudly in the hall. Hedda turns and listens. Then she hastily locks up the packet in the drawer, and lays the key on the inkstand.

Eilert Lövborg, with his greatcoat on and his hat in his hand, tears open the hall door. He looks somewhat confused and irritated.

Lövborg.

[Looking towards the hall.] And I tell you I must and will come in! There!

[He closes the door, turns, sees Hedda, at once regains his self-control, and bows.

Hedda.

[At the writing-table.] Well, Mr. Lövborg, this is rather a late hour to call for Thea.

Lövborg.

You mean rather an early hour to call on you. Pray pardon me.

Hedda.

How do you know that she is still here?

Lövborg.

They told me at her lodgings that she had been out all night.
Hedda.

[Going to the oval table.] Did you notice anything about the people of the house when they said that?

Lövborg.

[Looks inquiringly at her.] Notice anything about them?

Hedda.

I mean, did they seem to think it odd?

Lövborg.

[Suddenly understanding.] Oh yes, of course! I am dragging her down with me! However, I didn’t notice anything.—I suppose Tesman is not up yet?

Hedda.

No—I think not—

Lövborg.

When did he come home?

Hedda.

Very late.

Lövborg.

Did he tell you anything?

Hedda.

Yes, I gathered that you had had an exceedingly jolly evening at Judge Brack’s.
Lövborg.

Nothing more?

Hedda.

I don't think so. However, I was so dreadfully sleepy——

Mrs. Elvsted enters through the curtains of the middle doorway.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Going towards him.] Ah, Lövborg! At last——!

Lövborg.

Yes, at last. And too late!

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Looks anxiously at him.] What is too late?

Lövborg.

Everything is too late now. It is all over with me.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh no, no—don't say that!

Lövborg.

You will say the same when you hear——

Mrs. Elvsted.

I won't hear anything!
Hedda.
Perhaps you would prefer to talk to her alone? If so, I will leave you.

Lövborg.
No, stay—you too. I beg you to stay.

Mrs. Elvsted.
Yes, but I won’t hear anything, I tell you.

Lövborg.
It is not last night’s adventures that I want to talk about.

Mrs. Elvsted.
What is it then—?

Lövborg.
I want to say that now our ways must part.

Mrs. Elvsted.
Part!

Hedda.
[Involuntarily.] I knew it!

Lövborg.
You can be of no more service to me, Thea.

Mrs. Elvsted.
How can you stand there and say that! No more service to you! Am I not to help you now, as before? Are we not to go on working together?
Lövborg.

Henceforward I shall do no work.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Despairingly.] Then what am I to do with my life?

Lövborg.

You must try to live your life as if you had never known me.

Mrs. Elvsted.

But you know I cannot do that!

Lövborg.

Try if you cannot, Thea. You must go home again——

Mrs. Elvsted.

[In vehement protest.] Never in this world! Where you are, there will I be also! I will not let myself be driven away like this! I will remain here! I will be with you when the book appears.

Hedda.

[Half aloud, in suspense.] Ah yes—the book!

Lövborg.

[Looks at her.] My book and Thea's; for that is what it is.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, I feel that it is. And that is why I have a right to be with you when it appears! I will see with my own eyes how respect and honour pour in upon you afresh.
And the happiness—the happiness—oh, I must share it with you!

Lövborg.

Thea—our book will never appear.

Hedda.

Ah!

Mrs. Elvsted.

Never appear!

Lövborg.

Can never appear.

Mrs. Elvsted.

[In agonised foreboding.] Lövborg—what have you done with the manuscript?

Hedda.

[Looks anxiously at him.] Yes, the manuscript—?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Where is it?

Lövborg.

Oh Thea—don't ask me about it!

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, yes, I will know. I demand to be told at once.
LOVBORG.

The manuscript——. Well then—I have torn the manuscript into a thousand pieces.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Shrieks.] Oh no, no——!

HEDDA.

[Involuntarily.] But that's not——

LOVBORG.

[Looks at her.] Not true, you think?

HEDDA.

[Collecting herself.] Oh well, of course—since you say so. But it sounded so improbable——

LOVBORG.

It is true, all the same.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Wringing her hands.] Oh God—oh God, Hedda—torn his own work to pieces!

LOVBORG.

I have torn my own life to pieces. So why should I not tear my life-work too——?

MRS. ELVSTED.

And you did this last night?
Lövborg.

Yes, I tell you! Tore it into a thousand pieces—and scattered them on the fiord—far out. There there is cool sea-water at any rate—let them drift upon it—drift with the current and the wind. And then presently they will sink—deeper and deeper—as I shall, Thea.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Do you know, Lövborg, that what you have done with the book—I shall think of it to my dying day as though you had killed a little child.

Lövborg.

Yes, you are right. It is a sort of child-murder.

Mrs. Elvsted.

How could you, then—! Did not the child belong to me too?

Hedda.

[Almost inaudibly.] Ah, the child—

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Breathing heavily.] It is all over then. Well well, now I will go, Hedda.

Hedda.

But you are not going away from town?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, I don’t know what I shall do. I see nothing but darkness before me. [She goes out by the hall door.]
HEDDA.

[Stands waiting for a moment.] So you are not going to see her home, Mr. Lövborg?

LÖVBORG.

I? Through the streets? Would you have people see her walking with me?

HEDDA.

Of course I don’t know what else may have happened last night. But is it so utterly irretrievable?

LÖVBORG.

It will not end with last night—I know that perfectly well. And the thing is that now I have no taste for that sort of life either. I won’t begin it anew. She has broken my courage and my power of braving life out.

HEDDA.

[Looking straight before her.] So that pretty little fool has had her fingers in a man’s destiny. [Looks at him.] But all the same, how could you treat her so heartlessly.

LÖVBORG.

Oh, don’t say that it was heartless!

HEDDA.

To go and destroy what has filled her whole soul for months and years! You do not call that heartless!

LÖVBORG.

To you I can tell the truth, Hedda.
Hedda.
The truth?

Lövborg.
First promise me—give me your word—that what I now confide to you Thea shall never know.

Hedda.
I give you my word.

Lövborg.
Good. Then let me tell you that what I said just now was untrue.

Hedda.
About the manuscript?

Lövborg.
Yes. I have not torn it to pieces—nor thrown it into the fiord.

Hedda.
No, no—. But—where is it then?

Lövborg.
I have destroyed it none the less—utterly destroyed it, Hedda!

Hedda.
I don’t understand.

Lövborg.
Thea said that what I had done seemed to her like a child-murder.
HEDDA.
Yes, so she said.

LÖVBORG.
But to kill his child—that is not the worst thing a father can do to it.

HEDDA.
Not the worst?

LÖVBORG.
No. I wanted to spare Thea from hearing the worst.

HEDDA.
Then what is the worst?

LÖVBORG.
Suppose now, Hedda, that a man—in the small hours of the morning—came home to his child's mother after a night of riot and debauchery, and said: "Listen—I have been here and there—in this place and in that. And I have taken our child with me—to this place and to that. And I have lost the child—utterly lost it. The devil knows into what hands it may have fallen—who may have had their clutches on it."

HEDDA.
Well—but when all is said and done, you know—this was only a book—

LÖVBORG.
Thea's pure soul was in that book.
Hedda.

Yes, so I understand.

Lövborg.

And you can understand, too, that for her and me together no future is possible.

Hedda.

What path do you mean to take then?

Lövborg.

None. I will only try to make an end of it all—the sooner the better.

Hedda.

[A step nearer him.] Eilert Lövborg—listen to me.—Will you not try to—to do it beautifully?

Lövborg.

Beautifully? [Smiling.] With vine-leaves in my hair, as you used to dream in the old days——?

Hedda.

No, no. I have lost my faith in the vine-leaves. But beautifully nevertheless! For once in a way!—Good-bye! You must go now—and do not come here any more.

Lövborg.

Good-bye, Mrs. Tesman. And give George Tesman my love. [He is on the point of going.]
Hedda.

No, wait! I must give you a memento to take with you.

[She goes to the writing-table and opens the drawer and the pistol-case; then returns to Lövborg with one of the pistols.]

Lövborg.

[Looks at her.] This? Is this the memento?

Hedda.

[Nodding slowly.] Do you recognise it? It was aimed at you once.

Lövborg.

You should have used it then.

Hedda.

Take it—and do you use it now.

Lövborg.

[Puts the pistol in his breast pocket.] Thanks!

Hedda.

And beautifully, Eilert Lövborg. Promise me that!

Lövborg.

Good-bye, Hedda Gabler.

[He goes out by the hall door.]

[Hedda listens for a moment at the door. Then she goes up to the writing-table, takes out the packet of] manuscript, peeps under the cover, draws a few of the sheets half out, and looks at them. Next she goes over and seats herself in the arm-chair beside the stove, with the packet in her lap. Presently she opens the stove door, and then the packet.

HEDDA.

[Throws one of the quires into the fire and whispers to herself.] Now I am burning your child, Thea!—Burning it, curly-locks! [Throwing one or two more quires into the stove.] Your child and Eilert Lövborg's. [Throws the rest in.] I am burning—I am burning your child.
ACT FOURTH

The same rooms at the Tesmans'. It is evening. The drawing-room is in darkness. The back room is lighted by the hanging lamp over the table. The curtains over the glass door are drawn close.

Hedda, dressed in black, walks to and fro in the dark room. Then she goes into the back room and disappears for a moment to the left. She is heard to strike a few chords on the piano. Presently she comes in sight again, and returns to the drawing-room.

Berta enters from the right, through the inner room, with a lighted lamp, which she places on the table in front of the corner settee in the drawing-room. Her eyes are red with weeping, and she has black ribbons in her cap. She goes quietly and circumspectly out to the right. Hedda goes up to the glass door, lifts the curtain a little aside, and looks out into the darkness.

Shortly afterwards, Miss Tesman, in mourning, with a bonnet and veil on, comes in from the hall. Hedda goes towards her and holds out her hand.

Miss Tesman.

Yes, Hedda, here I am, in mourning and forlorn; for now my poor sister has at last found peace.

Hedda.

I have heard the news already, as you see. Tesman sent me a card.
Miss Tesman.

Yes, he promised me he would. But nevertheless I thought that to Hedda—here in the house of life—I ought myself to bring the tidings of death.

Hedda.

That was very kind of you.

Miss Tesman.

Ah, Rina ought not to have left us just now. This is not the time for Hedda's house to be a house of mourning.

Hedda.

[Changing the subject.] She died quite peacefully, did she not, Miss Tesman?

Miss Tesman.

Oh, her end was so calm, so beautiful. And then she had the unspeakable happiness of seeing George once more—and bidding him good-bye.—Has he not come home yet?

Hedda.

No. He wrote that he might be detained. But won't you sit down?

Miss Tesman.

No, thank you, my dear, dear Hedda. I should like to, but I have so much to do. I must prepare my dear one for her rest as well as I can. She shall go to her grave looking her best.
HEDDA.

Can I not help you in any way?

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, you must not think of it! Hedda Tesman must have no hand in such mournful work. Nor let her thoughts dwell on it either—not at this time.

HEDDA.

One is not always mistress of one's thoughts——

MISS TESMAN.

[Continuing.] Ah yes, it is the way of the world. At home we shall be sewing a shroud; and here there will soon be sewing too, I suppose—but of another sort, thank God!

GEORGE TESMAN enters by the hall door.

HEDDA.

Ah, you have come at last!

TESMAN.

You here, Aunt Julia? With Hedda? Fancy that!

MISS TESMAN.

I was just going, my dear boy. Well, have you done all you promised?

TESMAN.

No; I'm really afraid I have forgotten half of it. I must come to you again to-morrow. To-day my brain is all in a whirl. I can't keep my thoughts together.
Miss Tesman.

Why, my dear George, you mustn’t take it in this way.

Tesman.

Mustn’t—? How do you mean?

Miss Tesman.

Even in your sorrow you must rejoice, as I do—rejoice that she is at rest.

Tesman.

Oh yes, yes—you are thinking of Aunt Rina.

Hedda.

You will feel lonely now, Miss Tesman.

Miss Tesman.

Just at first, yes. But that will not last very long, I hope. I daresay I shall soon find an occupant for poor Rina’s little room.

Tesman.

Indeed? Who do you think will take it? Eh?

Miss Tesman.

Oh, there’s always some poor invalid or other in want of nursing, unfortunately.

Hedda.

Would you really take such a burden upon you again?
MISS TESMAN.

A burden! Heaven forgive you, child—it has been no burden to me.

HEDDA.

But suppose you had a total stranger on your hands——

MISS TESMAN.

Oh, one soon makes friends with sick folk; and it's such an absolute necessity for me to have some one to live for. Well, heaven be praised, there may soon be something in this house, too, to keep an old aunt busy.

HEDDA.

Oh, don't trouble about anything here.

TESMAN.

Yes, just fancy what a nice time we three might have together, if——?

HEDDA.

If——?

TESMAN.

[Uneasily.] Oh, nothing. It will all come right. Let us hope so—eh?

MISS TESMAN.

Well well, I daresay you two want to talk to each other. [Smiling.] And perhaps Hedda may have something to tell you too, George. Good-bye! I must go home to Rina. [Turning at the door.] How strange it is to think that now Rina is with me and with my poor brother as well!
Yes, fancy that, Aunt Julia! Eh?

[Miss Tesman goes out by the hall door.]

Hedda.

[Follows Tesman coldly and searchingly with her eyes.] I almost believe your Aunt Rina’s death affects you more than it does your Aunt Julia.

Tesman.

Oh, it’s not that alone. It’s Eilert I am so terribly uneasy about.

Hedda.

[Quickly.] Is there anything new about him?

Tesman.

I looked in at his rooms this afternoon, intending to tell him the manuscript was in safe keeping.

Hedda.

Well, did you not find him?

Tesman.

No. He wasn’t at home. But afterwards I met Mrs. Elvsted, and she told me that he had been here early this morning.

Hedda.

Yes, directly after you had gone.
Tesonan.

And he said that he had torn his manuscript to pieces—eh?

Hedda.

Yes, so he declared.

Tesonan.

Why, good heavens, he must have been completely out of his mind! And I suppose you thought it best not to give it back to him, Hedda?

Hedda.

No, he did not get it.

Tesonan.

But of course you told him that we had it?

Hedda.

No. [Quickly.] Did you tell Mrs. Elvsted?

Tesonan.

No; I thought I had better not. But you ought to have told him. Fancy, if, in desperation, he should go and do himself some injury! Let me have the manuscript, Hedda! I will take it to him at once. Where is it?

Hedda.

[Cold and immovable, leaning on the arm-chair.] I have not got it.

Tesonan.

Have not got it? What in the world do you mean?
HEDDA.

I have burnt it—every line of it.

TESMAN.

[With a violent movement of terror.] Burnt! Burnt Eilert's manuscript!

HEDDA.

Don't scream so. The servant might hear you.

TESMAN.

Burnt! Why, good God——! No, no, no! It's impossible!

HEDDA.

It is so, nevertheless.

TESMAN.

Do you know what you have done, Hedda? It's unlawful appropriation of lost property. Fancy that! Just ask Judge Brack, and he'll tell you what it is.

HEDDA.

I advise you not to speak of it—either to Judge Brack, or to any one else.

TESMAN.

But how could you do anything so unheard-of? What put it into your head? What possessed you? Answer me that—eh?

HEDDA.

[Suppressing an almost imperceptible smile.] I did it for your sake, George.
HEDDA GABLER

TESMAN.

For my sake!

HEDDA.

This morning, when you told me about what he had read to you——

TESMAN.

Yes, yes—what then?

HEDDA.

You acknowledged that you envied him his work.

TESMAN.

Oh, of course I didn’t mean that literally.

HEDDA.

No matter—I could not bear the idea that any one should throw you into the shade.

TESMAN.

[In an outburst of mingled doubt and joy.] Hedda! Oh, is this true? But—but—I never knew you show your love like that before. Fancy that!

HEDDA.

Well, I may as well tell you that—just at this time——

[Impatiently, breaking off.] No, no; you can ask Aunt Julia. She will tell you, fast enough.

TESMAN.

Oh, I almost think I understand you, Hedda! [Clasps his hands together.] Great heavens! do you really mean it! Eh?
Hedda.

Don’t shout so. The servant might hear.

Tesman.

[Laughing in irrepressible glee.] The servant! Why, how absurd you are, Hedda. It’s only my old Berta! Why, I’ll tell Berta myself.

Hedda.

[Clenching her hands together in desperation.] Oh, it is killing me,—it is killing me, all this!

Tesman.

What is, Hedda? Eh?

Hedda.

[Coldly, controlling herself.] All this—absurdity!—George.

Tesman.

Absurdity! Do you see anything absurd in my being overjoyed at the news! But after all—perhaps I had better not say anything to Berta.

Hedda.

Oh,—why not that too?

Tesman.

No, no, not yet! But I must certainly tell Aunt Julia. And then that you have begun to call me George too! Fancy that! Oh, Aunt Julia will be so happy—so happy!
HEDDA.

When she hears that I have burnt Eilert Lövborg's manuscript—for your sake?

TESMAN.

No, by-the-bye—that affair of the manuscript—of course nobody must know about that. But that you love me so much,¹ Hedda—Aunt Julia must really share my joy in that! I wonder, now, whether this sort of thing is usual in young wives? Eh?

HEDDA.

I think you had better ask Aunt Julia that question too.

TESMAN.

I will indeed, some time or other. [Looks uneasy and downcast again.] And yet the manuscript—the manuscript! Good God! it is terrible to think what will become of poor Eilert now.

MRS. ELVSTED, dressed as in the first Act, with hat and cloak, enters by the hall door.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Greets them hurriedly, and says in evident agitation.] Oh, dear Hedda, forgive my coming again.

HEDDA.

What is the matter with you, Thea?

TESMAN.

Something about Eilert Lövborg again—eh?

¹ Literally, "That you burn for me."
MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes! I am dreadfully afraid some misfortune has happened to him.

HEDDA.

[Seizes her arm.] Ah,—do you think so!

TESMAN.

Why, good Lord,—what makes you think that, Mrs. Elvsted?

MRS. ELVSTED.

I heard them talking of him at my boarding-house—just as I came in. Oh, the most incredible rumours are afloat about him to-day.

TESMAN.

Yes, fancy, so I heard too! And I can bear witness that he went straight home to bed last night. Fancy that!

HEDDA.

Well, what did they say at the boarding-house?

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, I couldn’t make out anything clearly. Either they knew nothing definite, or else—— They stopped talking when they saw me; and I did not dare to ask.

TESMAN.

[Moving about uneasily.] We must hope—we must hope that you misunderstood them, Mrs. Elvsted.
Mrs. Elvsted.

No, no; I am sure it was of him they were talking. And I heard something about the hospital or——

Tesman.

The hospital?

Hedda.

No—surely that cannot be!

Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, I was in such mortal terror! I went to his lodgings and asked for him there.

Hedda.

You could make up your mind to that, Thea!

Mrs. Elvsted.

What else could I do? I really could bear the suspense no longer.

Tesman.

But you didn't find him either—eh?

Mrs. Elvsted.

No. And the people knew nothing about him. He hadn't been home since yesterday afternoon, they said.

Tesman.

Yesterday! Fancy, how could they say that?
Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, I am sure something terrible must have happened to him.

Tesman.

Hedda dear—how would it be if I were to go and make inquiries—?

Hedda.

No, no—don’t you mix yourself up in this affair.

Judge Brack, with his hat in his hand, enters by the hall door, which Berta opens, and closes behind him. He looks grave and bows in silence.

Tesman.

Oh, is that you, my dear Judge? Eh?

Brack.

Yes. It was imperative I should see you this evening.

Tesman.

I can see you have heard the news about Aunt Rina?

Brack.

Yes, that among other things.

Tesman.

Isn’t it sad—eh?

Brack.

Well, my dear Tesman, that depends on how you look at it.
TESMAN.

[Looks doubtfully at him.] Has anything else happened?

BRACK.

Yes.

HEDDA.

[In suspense.] Anything sad, Judge Brack?

BRACK.

That, too, depends on how you look at it, Mrs. Tesman.

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Unable to restrain her anxiety.] Oh! it is something about Eilert Lövborg!

BRACK.

[With a glance at her.] What makes you think that, Madam? Perhaps you have already heard something——?

MRS. ELVSTED.

[In confusion.] No, nothing at all, but——

TESMAN.

Oh, for heaven's sake, tell us!

BRACK.

[Shrugging his shoulders.] Well, I regret to say Eilert Lövborg has been taken to the hospital. He is lying at the point of death.
MRS. ELVSTED.

[Shrieks.] Oh God! oh God—!

TESMAN.

To the hospital! And at the point of death!

HEDDA.

[Involuntarily.] So soon then—

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Wailing.] And we parted in anger, Hedda!

HEDDA.

[Whispers.] Thea—Thea—be careful!

MRS. ELVSTED.

[Not heeding her.] I must go to him! I must see him alive!

BRACK.

It is useless, Madam. No one will be admitted.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, at least tell me what has happened to him? What is it?

TESMAN.

You don’t mean to say that he has himself—— Eh?

HEDDA.

Yes, I am sure he has.
HEDDA GABLER

ACT IV

TESMAN.

Hedda, how can you——?

BRACK.

[Keeping his eyes fixed upon her.] Unfortunately you have guessed quite correctly, Mrs. Tesman.

MRS. ELMSTED.

Oh, how horrible!

TESMAN.

Himself, then! Fancy that!

HEDDA.

Shot himself!

BRACK.

Rightly guessed again, Mrs. Tesman.

MRS. ELMSTED.

[With an effort at self-control.] When did it happen, Mr. Brack?

BRACK.

This afternoon—between three and four.

TESMAN.

But, good Lord, where did he do it? Eh?

BRACK.

[With some hesitation.] Where? Well—I suppose at his lodgings.
MRS. ELVSTED.

No, that cannot be; for I was there between six and seven.

BRACK.

Well then, somewhere else. I don't know exactly. I only know that he was found—. He had shot himself—in the breast.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, how terrible! That he should die like that!

HEDDA.

[To Brack.] Was it in the breast?

BRACK.

Yes—as I told you.

HEDDA.

Not in the temple?

BRACK.

In the breast, Mrs. Tesman.

HEDDA.

Well, well—the breast is a good place, too.

BRACK.

How do you mean, Mrs. Tesman?

HEDDA.

[Evasively.] Oh, nothing—nothing.
TESMAN.

And the wound is dangerous, you say—eh?

BRACK.

Absolutely mortal. The end has probably come by this time.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, yes, I feel it. The end! The end! Oh, Hedda ———!

TESMAN.

But tell me, how have you learnt all this?

BRACK.

[Curtly.] Through one of the police. A man I had some business with.

HEDDA.

[In a clear voice.] At last a deed worth doing!

TESMAN.

[Terrified.] Good heavens, Hedda! what are you saying?

HEDDA.

I say there is beauty in this.

BRACK.

H'm, Mrs. Tesman——

TESMAN.

Beauty! Fancy that!
Mrs. Elvsted.

Oh, Hedda, how can you talk of beauty in such an act!

Hedda.

Eilert Lövborg has himself made up his account with life. He has had the courage to do—the one right thing.

Mrs. Elvsted.

No, you must never think that was how it happened! It must have been in delirium that he did it.

Tesman.

In despair!

Hedda.

That he did not. I am certain of that.

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, yes! In delirium! Just as when he tore up our manuscript.

Brack.

[Starting.] The manuscript? Has he torn that up?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Yes, last night.

Tesman.

[Whispers softly.] Oh, Hedda, we shall never get over this.

Brack.

H'm, very extraordinary.
[Moving about the room.] To think of Eilert going out of the world in this way! And not leaving behind him the book that would have immortalised his name——

Mrs. Elvsted.
Oh, if only it could be put together again!

Tesman.
Yes, if it only could! I don't know what I would not give——

Mrs. Elvsted.
Perhaps it can, Mr. Tesman.

Tesman.
What do you mean?

Mrs. Elvsted.
[Searches in the pocket of her dress.] Look here. I have kept all the loose notes he used to dictate from.

Hedda.
[A step forward.] Ah——!

Tesman.
You have kept them, Mrs. Elvsted! Eh?

Mrs. Elvsted.
Yes, I have them here. I put them in my pocket when I left home. Here they still are——
HEDDA GABLER

Tesman.
Oh, do let me see them!

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Hands him a bundle of papers.] But they are in such disorder—all mixed up.

Tesman.
Fancy, if we could make something out of them, after all! Perhaps if we two put our heads together——

Mrs. Elvsted.
Oh yes, at least let us try——

Tesman.
We will manage it! We must! I will dedicate my life to this task.

Hedda.
You, George? Your life?

Tesman.
Yes, or rather all the time I can spare. My own collections must wait in the meantime. Hedda—you understand, eh? I owe this to Eilert's memory.

Hedda.
Perhaps.

Tesman.
And so, my dear Mrs. Elvsted, we will give our whole minds to it. There is no use in brooding over what can't be undone—eh? We must try to control our grief as much as possible, and——

MRS. ELVSTED.

Yes, yes, Mr. Tesman, I will do the best I can.

TESMAN.

Well then, come here. I can't rest until we have looked through the notes. Where shall we sit? Here? No, in there, in the back room. Excuse me, my dear Judge. Come with me, Mrs. Elvsted.

MRS. ELVSTED.

Oh, if only it were possible!

[TESMAN and MRS. ELVSTED go into the back room. She takes off her hat and cloak. They both sit at the table under the hanging lamp, and are soon deep in an eager examination of the papers. HEDDA crosses to the stove and sits in the arm-chair. Presently BRACK goes up to her.]

HEDDA.

[In a low voice.] Oh, what a sense of freedom it gives one, this act of Eilert Lövborg's.

BRACK.

Freedom, Mrs. Hedda? Well, of course, it is a release for him——

HEDDA.

I mean for me. It gives me a sense of freedom to know that a deed of deliberate courage is still possible in this world,—a deed of spontaneous beauty.
Brack.

[Smiling.] H'm—my dear Mrs. Hedda—

Hedda.

Oh, I know what you are going to say. For you are a kind of specialist too, like—you know!

Brack.

[Looking hard at her.] Eilert Lövborg was more to you than perhaps you are willing to admit to yourself. Am I wrong?

Hedda.

I don't answer such questions. I only know that Eilert Lövborg has had the courage to live his life after his own fashion. And then—the last great act, with its beauty! Ah! that he should have the will and the strength to turn away from the banquet of life—so early.

Brack.

I am sorry, Mrs. Hedda,—but I fear I must dispel an amiable illusion.

Hedda.

Illusion?

Brack.

Which could not have lasted long in any case.

Hedda.

What do you mean?

Brack.

Eilert Lövborg did not shoot himself—voluntarily.
Hedda.
Not voluntarily?

Brack.
No. The thing did not happen exactly as I told it.

Hedda.

[In suspense.] Have you concealed something? What is it?

Brack.
For poor Mrs. Elvsted's sake I idealised the facts a little.

Hedda.
What are the facts?

Brack.
First, that he is already dead.

Hedda.
At the hospital?

Brack.
Yes—without regaining consciousness.

Hedda.
What more have you concealed?

Brack.
This—the event did not happen at his lodgings.

Hedda.
Oh, that can make no difference.
Brack.

Perhaps it may. For I must tell you—Eilert Lövborg was found shot in—in Mademoiselle Diana’s boudoir.

Hedda.

[Makes a motion as if to rise, but sinks back again.] That is impossible, Judge Brack! He cannot have been there again to-day.

Brack.

He was there this afternoon. He went there, he said, to demand the return of something which they had taken from him. Talked wildly about a lost child——

Hedda.

Ah—so that was why——

Brack.

I thought probably he meant his manuscript; but now I hear he destroyed that himself. So I suppose it must have been his pocket-book.

Hedda.

Yes, no doubt. And there—there he was found?

Brack.

Yes, there. With a pistol in his breast-pocket, discharged. The ball had lodged in a vital part.

Hedda.

In the breast—yes.
Brack.

No—in the bowels.

Hedda.

[Looks up at him with an expression of loathing.] That too! Oh, what curse is it that makes everything I touch turn ludicrous and mean?

Brack.

There is one point more, Mrs. Hedda—another disagreeable feature in the affair.

Hedda.

And what is that?

Brack.

The pistol he carried—

Hedda.

[Breathless.] Well? What of it?

Brack.

He must have stolen it.

Hedda.

[Leaps up.] Stolen it! That is not true! He did not steal it!

Brack.

No other explanation is possible. He must have stolen it—. Hush!

Tesman and Mrs. Elvsted have risen from the table in the back room, and come into the drawing-room.
Tesman.

With the papers in both his hands.] Hedda dear, it is almost impossible to see under that lamp! Think of that!

Hedda.

Yes, I am thinking.

Tesman.

Would you mind our sitting at your writing-table—eh?

Hedda.

If you like. [Quickly.] No, wait! Let me clear it first!

Tesman.

Oh, you needn't trouble, Hedda. There is plenty of room.

Hedda.

No, no, let me clear it, I say! I will take these things in and put them on the piano. There!

[She has drawn out an object, covered with sheet music, from under the bookcase, places several other pieces of music upon it, and carries the whole into the inner room, to the left. Tesman lays the scraps of paper on the writing-table, and moves the lamp there from the corner table. He and Mrs. Elvsted sit down and proceed with their work. Hedda returns.

Hedda.

[Behind Mrs. Elvsted's chair, gently ruffling her hair.] Well, my sweet Thea,—how goes it with Eilert Lövborg's monument?
MRS. ELVSTED.

[Looks dispiritedly up at her.] Oh, it will be terribly hard to put in order.

TESMÁN.

We must manage it. I am determined. And arranging other people’s papers is just the work for me.

[Hedda goes over to the stove, and seats herself on one of the footstools. Brack stands over her, leaning on the arm-chair.]

HEDDA.

[Whispers.] What did you say about the pistol?

BRACK.

[Softly.] That he must have stolen it.

HEDDA.

Why stolen it?

BRACK.

Because every other explanation ought to be impossible, Mrs. Hedda.

HEDDA.

Indeed?

BRACK.

[Glances at her.] Of course Eilert Lövborg was here this morning. Was he not?

HEDDA.

Yes.
Hedda Gabler

Act IV

Brack.
Were you alone with him?

Hedda.
Part of the time.

Brack.
Did you not leave the room whilst he was here?

Hedda.
No.

Brack.
Try to recollect. Were you not out of the room a moment?

Hedda.
Yes, perhaps just a moment—out in the hall.

Brack.
And where was your pistol-case during that time?

Hedda.
I had it locked up in——

Brack.
Well, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.
The case stood there on the writing-table.

Brack.
Have you looked since, to see whether both the pistols are there?
Hedda.

No.

Brack.

Well, you need not. I saw the pistol found in Lövborg's pocket, and I knew it at once as the one I had seen yesterday—and before, too.

Hedda.

Have you it with you?

Brack.

No; the police have it.

Hedda.

What will the police do with it?

Brack.

Search till they find the owner.

Hedda.

Do you think they will succeed?

Brack.

[Bends over her and whispers.] No, Hedda Gabler—not so long as I say nothing.

Hedda.

[Looks frightened at him.] And if you do not say nothing,—what then?
Brack.

[Shrugs his shoulders.] There is always the possibility that the pistol was stolen.

Hedda.

[Firmly.] Death rather than that.

Brack.

[Smiling.] People say such things—but they don't do them.

Hedda.

[Without replying.] And supposing the pistol was not stolen, and the owner is discovered? What then?

Brack.

Well, Hedda—then comes the scandal.

Hedda.

The scandal!

Brack.

Yes, the scandal—of which you are so mortally afraid. You will, of course, be brought before the court—both you and Mademoiselle Diana. She will have to explain how the thing happened—whether it was an accidental shot or murder. Did the pistol go off as he was trying to take it out of his pocket, to threaten her with? Or did she tear the pistol out of his hand, shoot him, and push it back into his pocket? That would be quite like her; for she is an able-bodied young person, this same Mademoiselle Diana.
HEDDA.

But I have nothing to do with all this repulsive business.

BRACK.

No. But you will have to answer the question: Why did you give Eilert Lövborg the pistol? And what conclusions will people draw from the fact that you did give it to him?

HEDDA.

[Lets her head sink.] That is true. I did not think of that.

BRACK.

Well, fortunately, there is no danger, so long as I say nothing.

HEDDA.

[Looks up at him.] So I am in your power, Judge Brack. You have me at your beck and call, from this time forward.

BRACK.

[Whispers softly.] Dearest Hedda—believe me—I shall not abuse my advantage.

HEDDA.

I am in your power none the less. Subject to your will and your demands. A slave, a slave then! [Rises impetuously.] No, I cannot endure the thought of that! Never!
Brack.

[Lookshalf-mockingly at her.] People generally get used to the inevitable.

Hedda.

[Returns his look.] Yes, perhaps. [She crosses to the writing-table. Suppressing an involuntary smile, she imitates Tesman's intonations.] Well? Are you getting on, George? Eh?

Tesman.

Heaven knows, dear. In any case it will be the work of months.

Hedda.

[As before.] Fancy that! [Passes her hands softly through Mrs. Elvsted's hair.] Doesn't it seem strange to you, Thea? Here are you sitting with Tesman—just as you used to sit with Eilert Lövborg?

Mrs. Elvsted.

Ah, if I could only inspire your husband in the same way!

Hedda.

Oh, that will come too—in time.

Tesman.

Yes, do you know, Hedda—I really think I begin to feel something of the sort. But won't you go and sit with Brack again?

Hedda.

Is there nothing I can do to help you two?
Tesman.

No, nothing in the world. [Turning his head.] I trust to you to keep Hedda company, my dear Brack.

Brack.

[With a glance at Hedda.] With the very greatest of pleasure.

Hedda.

Thanks. But I am tired this evening. I will go in and lie down a little on the sofa.

Tesman.

Yes, do dear—eh?

[Hedda goes into the back room and draws the curtains. A short pause. Suddenly she is heard playing a wild dance on the piano.]

Mrs. Elvsted.

[Starts from her chair.] Oh—what is that?

Tesman.

[Runs to the doorway.] Why, my dearest Hedda—don't play dance-music to-night! Just think of Aunt Rina! And of Eilert too!

Hedda.

[Plays the piano.] And of Aunt Julia. And of all the rest of them.—After this, I will be quiet. [Closes the curtains again.]

Tesman.

[At the writing-table.] It's not good for her to see us at this distressing work. I'll tell you what, Mrs. Elvsted, —you shall take the empty room at Aunt Julia's and then I will come over in the evenings, and we can sit and work there—eh?

Hedda.

[In the inner room.] I hear what you are saying, Tesman. But how am I to get through the evenings out here?

Tesman.

[Turning over the papers.] Oh, I daresay Judge Brack will be so kind as to look in now and then, even though I am out.

Brack.

[In the arm-chair, calls out gaily.] Every blessed evening, with all the pleasure in life, Mrs. Tesman! We shall get on capitally together, we two!

Hedda.

[Speaking loud and clear.] Yes, don't you flatter yourself we will, Judge Brack? Now that you are the one cock in the basket——

[A shot is heard within. Tesman, Mrs. Elvsted, and Brack leap to their feet.

Tesman.

Oh, now she is playing with those pistols again.
[He throws back the curtains and runs in, followed by Mrs. Elvsted. Hedda lies stretched on the sofa lifeless. Confusion and cries. Berta enters in alarm from the right.
TESMAN.

[Shrieks to Brack.] Shot herself! Shot herself in the temple! Fancy that!

BRACK.

[Half-fainting in the arm-chair.] Good God!—people don't do such things!
THE MASTER BUILDER
THE MASTER BUILDER

INTRODUCTION*

With The Master Builder—or Master Builder Solness, as the title runs in the original—we enter upon the final stage in Ibsen’s career. “You are essentially right,” the poet wrote to Count Prozor in March, 1900, “when you say that the series which closes with the Epilogue (When We Dead Awaken) began with Master Builder Solness.”

“Ibsen,” says Dr. Brahm, “wrote in Christiania all the four works which he thus seems to bracket together—Solness, Eyolf, Borkman, and When We Dead Awaken. He returned to Norway in July, 1891, for a stay of indefinite length; but the restless wanderer over Europe was destined to leave his home no more. . . . He had not returned, however, to throw himself, as of old, into the battle of the passing day. Polemics are entirely absent from the poetry of his old age. He leaves the State and Society at peace. He who had departed as the creator of Falk [in Love’s Comedy] now, on his return, gazes, not satirically, but rather in a lyric mood, into the secret places of human nature and the wonders of his own soul.”

Dr. Brahm, however, seems to be mistaken in thinking that Ibsen returned to Norway with no definite intention of settling down. Dr. Julius Elias (an excellent authority) reports that shortly before Ibsen left Munich in 1891, he remarked one day, “I must get back to the North!”

"Is that a sudden impulse?" asked Elias. "Oh no," was the reply; "I want to be a good head of a household and have my affairs in order. To that end I must consolidate my property, lay it down in good securities, and get it under control—and that one can best do where one has rights of citizenship." Some critics will no doubt be shocked to find the poet whom they have written down an "anarchist" confessing such bourgeois motives.

After his return to Norway, Ibsen’s correspondence became very scant, and we have no letters dating from the period when he was at work on The Master Builder. On the other hand, we possess a curious lyrical prelude to the play, which he put on paper on March 16, 1892. It is said to have been his habit, before setting to work on a play, to "crystallise in a poem the mood which then possessed him"; but the following is the only one of these keynote poems which has been published. I give it in the original language, with a literal translation:

DE SAD DER, DE TO—

De sad der, de to, i saa lunt et hus
ved höst og i vinterdage,
Saa brændte huset. Alt ligger i grus.
De to faar i asken rage.

For nede i den er et smykke gemt,— et smykke, som aldrig kan brænde.
Og leder de trofast, hænder det nemt at det findes af ham eller hende.

Men finder de end, de brandlidte to,
det dyre, ildfaste smykke,— aldrig hun finder sin brændte tro, han aldrig sin brændte lykke.
THEY SAT THERE, THE TWO—

They sat there, the two, in so cosy a house, through autumn and winter days. Then the house burned down. Everything lies in ruins. The two must grope among the ashes.

For among them is hidden a jewel—a jewel that never can burn. And if they search faithfully, it may easily happen that he or she may find it.

But even should they find it, the burnt-out two—find this precious unburnable jewel—never will she find her burnt faith, he never his burnt happiness.

This is the latest piece of Ibsen’s verse that has been given to the world; but one of his earliest poems—first printed in 1858—was also, in some sort, a prelude to The Master Builder. Of this a literal translation may suffice. It is called

BUILDING-PLANS

I remember as clearly as if it had been to-day the evening when, in the paper, I saw my first poem in print. There I sat in my den, and, with long-drawn puffs, I smoked and I dreamed in blissful self-complacency.

“I will build a cloud-castle. It shall shine all over the North. It shall have two wings: one little and one great. The great wing shall shelter a deathless poet; the little wing shall serve as a young girl’s bower.”

The plan seemed to me nobly harmonious; but as time went on it fell into confusion. When the master grew reasonable, the castle turned utterly crazy; the great wing became too little, the little wing fell to ruin.

Thus we see that, thirty-five years before the date of The Master Builder, Ibsen’s imagination was preoccupied with the symbol of a master building a castle in the air, and a young girl in one of its towers.

There has been some competition among the poet's young lady friends for the honour of having served as his model for Hilda. Several, no doubt, are entitled to some share in it. One is not surprised to learn that among the papers he left behind were sheaves upon sheaves of letters from women. "All these ladies," says Dr. Julius Elias, "demanded something of him—some cure for their agonies of soul, or for the incomprehension from which they suffered; some solution of the riddle of their nature. Almost every one of them regarded herself as a problem to which Ibsen could not but have the time and the interest to apply himself. They all thought they had a claim on the creator of Nora. . . . Of this chapter of his experience, Fru Ibsen spoke with ironic humour. 'Ibsen (I have often said to him), Ibsen, keep these swarms of over-strained womenfolk at arm's length.' 'Oh no (he would reply), let them alone. I want to observe them more closely.' His observations would take a longer or shorter time as the case might be, and would always contribute to some work of art."

The principal model for Hilda was doubtless Fräulein Emilie Bardach, of Vienna, whom he met at Gossensass in the autumn of 1889. He was then sixty-one years of age; she is said to have been seventeen. As the lady herself handed his letters to Dr. Brandes for publication, there can be no indiscretion in speaking of them freely. Some passages from them I have quoted in the introduction to Hedda Gabler—passages which show that at first the poet deliberately put aside his Gossensass impressions for use when he should stand at a greater distance from them, and meanwhile devoted himself to work in a totally different key. On October 15, 1889, he writes, in his second letter to Fräulein Bardach: "I cannot repress my summer memories, nor do I want to. I live through my experiences again and again, and yet again. To transmute it all into a poem I find, in the meantime, impossible. In the meantime? Shall I succeed in doing so some time in the future? And do I really wish to succeed? In the meantime, at any rate, I do not. . . . And yet it must come in time." The letters number twelve in all, and are couched in a tone of sentimental regret for the brief, bright summer days of their acquaintance-ship. The keynote is struck in the inscription on the back of a photograph which he gave her before they parted: An die Maison e eines Septemberlebens—in Tirol, 27/9/89. In her album he had written the words:

Hohes, schmerzliches Glück—
  um das Unerreichbare zu ringen!

in which we may, if we like, see a foreshadowing of the Solness frame of mind. In the fifth letter of the series he refers to her as "an enigmatic Princess"; in the sixth he twice calls her "my dear Princess"; but this is the only point at which the letters definitely and unmistakably point forward to The Master Builder. In the ninth letter (February 6, 1890) he says: "I feel it a matter of conscience to end, or at any rate, to restrict, our correspondence." The tenth letter, six months later, is one of kindly condolence on the death of the young lady’s father. In the eleventh (very short) note, dated December 30, 1890, he acknowledges some small gift, but says: “Please, for the present, do not write to me again. . . . I will soon send you my new play [Hedda Gabler]. Receive it in friendship, but in silence!” This injunction she apparently obeyed. When The Master Builder appeared, it would seem that Ibsen did not even send her a copy of the play; and we gather that he was rather annoyed when she sent him a photograph signed “Princess of Orangia.” On his seventieth birthday, however, she telegraphed her congratulations, to which he returned a very cordial reply. And here their relations ended.

1 "To the May-sun of a September life—in Tyrol."
2 "High, painful happiness—to struggle for the unattainable!"

That she was right, however, in regarding herself as his principal model for Hilda appears from an anecdote related by Dr. Elias. It is not an altogether pleasing anecdote, but Dr. Elias is an unexceptionable witness, and it can by no means be omitted from an examination into the origins of The Master Builder. Ibsen had come to Berlin in February, 1891, for the first performance of Hedda Gabler. Such experiences were always a trial to him, and he felt greatly relieved when they were over. Packing, too, he detested; and Elias having helped him through this terrible ordeal, the two sat down to lunch together, while awaiting the train. An expansive mood descended upon Ibsen, and chuckling over his champagne glass, he said: “Do you know, my next play is already hovering before me—of course in vague outline. But of one thing I have got firm hold. An experience:

1 Neue deutsche Rundschau, December, 1906, p. 1462.
woman's figure. Very interesting, very interesting indeed. Again a spice of devilry in it.” Then he related how he had met in the Tyrol a Viennese girl of very remarkable character. She had at once made him her confidant. The gist of her confessions was that she did not care a bit about one day marrying a well brought-up young man—most likely she would never marry. What tempted and charmed and delighted her was to lure other women’s husbands away from them. She was a little daemonic wrecker; she often appeared to him like a little bird of prey, that would fain have made him, too, her booty. He had studied her very, very closely. For the rest, she had had no great success with him. “She did not get hold of me, but I got hold of her—for my play. Then I fancy” (here he chuckled again) “she consoled herself with some one else.” Love seemed to mean for her only a sort of morbid imagination. This, however, was only one side of her nature. His little model had had a great deal of heart and of womanly understanding; and every woman, thanks to the spontaneous power she could gain over him, might, if she wished it, guide some man towards the good. “Thus Ibsen spoke,” says Elias, “calmly and coolly, gazing as it were into the far distance, like an artist taking an objective view of some experience—like Rubek speaking of his soul-thefts. He had stolen a soul, and put it to a double employment. Thea Elvsted and Hilda Wangel are intimately related—are, indeed, only different expressions of the same nature.” If Ibsen actually declared Thea and Hilda to be drawn from one model, we must of course take his word for it; but the relationship is hard to discern.
There can be no reasonable doubt, then, that the Gossensass episode gave the primary impulse to The Master Builder. But it seems pretty well established, too, that another lady, whom he met in Christiania after his return in 1891, also contributed largely to the character of Hilda. This may have been the reason why he resented Fräulein Bardach's appropriating to herself the title of "Princess of Orangia."

The preliminary studies for The Master Builder, pub-ished in the Literary Remains, are scanty and of slight interest. They are little more, indeed, than fragments of the finished play, nowhere indicating any considerable change of plan. Perhaps the most interesting trait in them occurs where Solness is giving Hilda an account of his progress in his profession. His work is in demand, he says, far and wide; "and now, of late years, they are beginning to take an interest in me abroad." No doubt this touch was deleted because it pointed too clearly to the identity of Solness and his creator.

The play was published in the middle of December, 1892. It was acted both in Germany and England before it was seen in the Scandinavian capitals. Its first performance took place at the Lessing Theatre, Berlin, January 19, 1893, with Emanuel Reicher as Solness and Frl. Reisenhofer as Hilda. In London it was first performed at the Trafalgar Square Theatre (now the Duke of York's) on February 20, 1893, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Waring and Miss Elizabeth Robins, who played Solness and Hilda. This was one of the most brilliant and successful of English Ibsen productions. Miss Robins was almost an ideal Hilda, and Mr. Waring's
Solness was exceedingly able. Some thirty performances were given in all, and the play was reproduced at the Opera Comique later in the season, with Mr. Lewis Wal- ler in Solness. In the spring of 1911, Hilda and Solness were acted at the Little Theatre by Miss Lillah McCarthy and Mr. Norman McKinnell, respectively. In Christiania and Copenhagen the play was produced on the same evening, March 8, 1893; the Copenhagen Solness and Hilda were Emil Poulsen and Fru Hennings. A Swedish production, by Lindberg, soon followed, both in Stockholm and Gothenburg. In Paris Solness le constructeur was not seen until April 3, 1894, when it was produced by “L’Œuvre” with M. Lugné-Poë as Solness. This company, sometimes with Mme. Suzanne Després and sometimes with Mme. Berthe Bady as Hilda, in 1894 and 1895 presented the play in Lon- don, Brussels, Amsterdam, Milan, and other cities. In October, 1894, they visited Christiania, where Ibsen was present at one of their performances, and is reported by Herman Bang to have been so enraptured with it that he exclaimed, “This is the resurrection of my play!” On this occasion Mme. Bady was the Hilda. The first performance of the play in America took place at the Carnegie Lyceum, New York, on January 16, 1900, with Mr. William H. Pascoe as Solness and Miss Florence Kahn as Hilda. The performance was repeated in the course of the same month, both at Washington and Bos- ton. Mme. Nazimova has since found in Hilda one of her most notable parts.

In England, and probably elsewhere as well, The Master Builder produced a curious double effect. It alienated many of the poet's staunchest admirers, and it powerfully attracted many people who had hitherto been hostile to him. Looking back, it is easy to see why this should have been so; for here was certainly a new thing in drama, which could not but set up many novel reactions. A greater contrast could scarcely be imagined than that between the hard, cold, precise outlines of Hedda Gabler and the vague mysterious atmosphere of The Master Builder, in which, though the dialogue is sternly restrained within the limits of prose, the art of drama seems for ever on the point of floating away to blend with the art of music. Substantially, the play is one long dialogue between Solness and Hilda; and it would be quite possible to analyse this dialogue in terms of music, noting (for example) the announcement first of this theme and then of that, the resumption and reinforcement of a theme which seemed to have been dropped, the contrapuntal interweaving of two or more motives, a scherzo here, a fugal passage there. Leaving this exercise to some one more skilled in music (or less unskilled) than myself, I may note that in The Master Builder Ibsen resumes his favourite retrospective method, from which in Hedda Gabler he had in great measure departed. But the retrospect with which we are here concerned is purely psychological. The external events involved in it are few and simple in comparison with the external events which are successively unveiled in the retrospective passages of The Wild Duck or Rosmersholm. The matter of the play is the soul-history of Halvard Solness, recounted to an impassioned listener—so impassioned, indeed, that the soul-changes it begets in her form an absorbing and thrilling drama. The gradations, retardations, accelerations of Solness's self-revealment are managed with the subtlest art, so as to keep the interest of the spectator ever on the stretch. The technical method was not new; it was simply that which Ibsen had been perfecting from Pillars of Society onward; but it was applied to a subject of a nature not only new to him, but new to literature.

That the play is full of symbolism it would be futile to deny; and the symbolism is mainly autobiographic. The churches which Solness sets out by building doubtless represent Ibsen's early romantic plays, the "homes for human beings" his social dramas; while the houses with high towers, merging into "castles in the air," stand for those spiritual dramas, with a wide outlook over the metaphysical environment of humanity, on which he was henceforth to be engaged. Perhaps it is not altogether fanciful to read a personal reference into Solness's refusal to call himself an architect, on the ground that his training has not been systematic—that he is a self-taught man. Ibsen too was in all essentials self-taught; his philosophy was entirely unsystematic; and, like Solness, he was no student of books. There may be an introspective note also in that dread of the younger generation to which Solness confesses. It is certain that the old Master-Builder was not lavish of his certificates of competence to young aspirants, though there is nothing to show that his reticence ever depressed or quenched any rising genius.

On the whole, then, it cannot be doubted that several symbolic motives are inwoven into the iridescent fabric of the play. But it is a great mistake to regard it as essentially and inseparably a piece of symbolism. Essentially it is the history of a sickly conscience, worked out in terms of pure psychology. Or rather, it is a study of a sickly and a robust conscience side by side. "The conscience is very conservative," Ibsen has somewhere said; and here Solness's conservatism is contrasted with Hilda's radicalism—or rather would-be radicalism, for we are led to suspect, towards the close, that the radical too is a conservative in spite of herself. The fact that Solness cannot climb as high as he builds implies, I take it, that he cannot act as freely as he thinks, or as Hilda would goad him into thinking. At such an altitude his conscience would turn dizzy, and life would become impossible to him. But here I am straying back to the interpretation of symbols. My present purpose is to insist that there is nothing in the play which has no meaning on the natural-psychological plane, and absolutely requires a symbolic interpretation to make it comprehensible. The symbols are harmonic undertones; the psychological melody is clear and consistent without any reference to them.¹ It is true that, in order to accept the action on what we may call the realistic level, we must suppose Solness to possess and to exercise, sometimes in spite of himself, and sometimes unconsciously, a considerable measure of hypnotic power. But the time is surely past when we could reckon hypnotism among "supernatural" phenomena. Whether the particular forms of hypnotic influence attributed to Solness do actually exist is a question we need not determine. The poet does not demand our absolute credence, as though he were giving evidence in the witness-box. What he requires is our imaginative acceptance of certain incidents which he purposely leaves hovering on the border between the natural and the preternatural, the explained and the unexplained. In this play, as in The Lady from the Sea and Little Eyolf, he shows a delicacy of art in his dalliance with the occult which irresistibly recalls the exquisite genius of Nathaniel Hawthorne.¹

The critics who insist on finding nothing but symbolism in the play have fastened on Mrs. Solness's "nine lovely dolls," and provided the most amazing interpretations for them. A letter which I contributed in 1893 to the Westminster Gazette records an incident which throws a curious light on the subject, and may be worth preserving. "At a recent first night," I wrote, "I happened to be seated just behind a well-known critic. He turned round to me and said, 'I want you to tell me what is your theory of those "nine lovely dolls."' Of course one can see that they are entirely symbolical.' 'I am not so sure of that,' I replied, remembering a Norwegian cousin of my own who treasured a favourite doll until she was nearer thirty than twenty. 'They of course symbolise the unsatisfied passion of motherhood in Mrs. Solness’s heart, but I have very little doubt that Ibsen makes use of this “symbol” because he has observed a similar case, or cases, in real life.' 'What!' cried the critic. 'He has seen a grown-up, a middle-aged, woman continuing to “live with” her dolls!' I was about to say that it did not seem to me so very improbable, when a lady who was seated next me, a total stranger to both of us, leant forward and said, 'Excuse my interrupting you, but it may perhaps interest you to know that I have three dolls to which I am deeply attached!' I will not be so rude as to conjecture this lady’s age, but we may be sure that a very young woman would not have had the courage to make such an avowal. Does it not seem that Ibsen knows a thing or two about human nature—English as well as Norwegian—which we dramatic critics, though bound by our calling to be subtle psychologists, have not yet fathomed?" In the course of the correspondence which followed, one very apposite anecdote was quoted from an American paper, the Argonaut: "An old Virginia lady said to a friend, on finding a treasured old teacup cracked by a careless maid, 'I know of nothing to compare with the affliction of losing a handsome piece of old china.' 'Surely,' said the friend, 'it is not so bad as losing one’s children.' 'Yes, it is,' replied the old lady, 'for when your children die, you do have the consolations of religion, you know.'"

It would be a paradox to call The Master Builder Ibsen’s greatest work, but one of his three or four greatest it assuredly is. Of all his writings, it is probably the most original, the most individual, the most unlike any other drama by any other writer. The form of Brand and Peer Gynt was doubtless suggested by other dramatic poems—notably by Faust. In The Wild Duck, in Rosmersholm, in Hedda Gabler, even in Little Eyolf and John Gabriel Borkman, there remain faint traces of the French leaven which was so strong in the earlier plays. But The Master Builder had no model and has no parallel. It shows no slightest vestige of outside influence. It is Ibsen, and nothing but Ibsen.

THE MASTER BUILDER

(1892)
CHARACTERS

Halvard Solness, Master Builder.
Aline Solness, his wife.
Doctor Herdal, physician.
Knut Brovik, formerly an architect, now in Solness's employment.
Ragnar Brovik, his son, draughtsman.
Kaia Fosli, his niece, book-keeper.
Miss Hilda Wangel.
Some Ladies.
A Crowd in the street.

The action passes in and about Solness's house.
ACT FIRST

A plainly-furnished work-room in the house of Halvard Solness. Folding doors on the left lead out to the hall. On the right is the door leading to the inner rooms of the house. At the back is an open door into the draughtsmen’s office. In front, on the left, a desk with books, papers and writing materials. Further back than the folding door, a stove. In the right-hand corner, a sofa, a table, and one or two chairs. On the table a water-bottle and glass. A smaller table, with a rocking-chair and arm-chair, in front on the right. Lighted lamps, with shades, on the table in the draughtsmen’s office, on the table in the corner, and on the desk.

In the draughtsmen’s office sit Knut Brovik and his son Ragnar, occupied with plans and calculations. At the desk in the outer office stands Kaia Fosli, writing in the ledger. Knut Brovik is a spare old man with white hair and beard. He wears a rather threadbare but well-brushed black coat, spectacles, and a somewhat discoloured white neckcloth. Ragnar Brovik is a well-dressed, light-haired man in his thirties, with a slight stoop. Kaia Fosli is a slightly built girl, a little over twenty, carefully dressed, and delicate-looking. She has a green shade over her eyes.—All three go on working for some time in silence.
THE MASTER BUILDER

[ACT I]

Knut Brovik.

[Rises suddenly, as if in distress, from the table; breathes heavily and laboriously as he comes forward into the doorway.] No, I can't bear it much longer!

Kaia.

[Going up to him.] You are feeling very ill this evening, are you not, uncle?

Brovik.

Oh, I seem to get worse every day.

Ragnar.

[Has risen and advances.] You ought to go home, father. Try to get a little sleep——

Brovik.

[Impatiently.] Go to bed, I suppose? Would you have me stifled outright?

Kaia.

Then take a little walk.

Ragnar.

Yes, do. I will come with you.

Brovik.

[With warmth.] I will not go till he comes! I am determined to have it out this evening with——[in a tone of suppressed bitterness]—with him—with the chief.
ACT I | THE MASTER BUILDER | 247

KAIA.

[Anxiously.] Oh no, uncle,—do wait awhile before doing that!

RAGNAR.

Yes, better wait, father!

BROVIK.

[Draws his breath laboriously.] Ha—ha—! I haven’t much time for waiting.

KAIA.

[Listening.] Hush! I hear him on the stairs.

[All three go back to their work. A short silence.]

HALLVARD SOLNESS comes in through the hall door. He is a man no longer young, but healthy and vigorous, with close-cut curly hair, dark moustache and dark thick eyebrows. He wears a greyish-green buttoned jacket with an upstanding collar and broad lappels. On his head he wears a soft grey felt hat, and he has one or two light portfolios under his arm.

SOLNESS.

[Near the door, points towards the draughtsmen’s office, and asks in a whisper.] Are they gone?

KAIA.

[Softly, shaking her head.] No.

[She takes the shade off her eyes. SOLNESS crosses the room, throws his hat on a chair, places the portfolios on the table by the sofa, and approaches the desk again. KAIA goes on writing without intermission, but seems nervous and uneasy.
Solness.

[Aloud.] What is that you are entering, Miss Fosli?

Kaia.

[Starts.] Oh, it is only something that——

Solness.

Let me look at it, Miss Fosli. [Bends over her, pretends to be looking into the ledger, and whispers:] Kaia!

Kaia.

[Softly, still writing.] Well?

Solness.

Why do you always take that shade off when I come?

Kaia.

[As before.] I look so ugly with it on.

Solness.

[Smiling.] Then you don't like to look ugly, Kaia?

Kaia.

[Half glancing up at him.] Not for all the world. Not in your eyes.

Solness.

[Strokes her hair gently.] Poor, poor little Kaia——
Kaia.

[Bending her head.] Hush—they can hear you!

[Solness strolls across the room to the right, turns and pauses at the door of the draughtsmen's office.

Solness.

Has any one been here for me?

Ragnar.

[Rising.] Yes, the young couple who want a villa built, out at Lövstrand.

Solness.

[Growling.] Oh, those two! They must wait. I am not quite clear about the plans yet.

Ragnar.

[Advancing, with some hesitation.] They were very anxious to have the drawings at once.

Solness.

[As before.] Yes, of course—so they all are.

Brovik.

[Looks up.] They say they are longing so to get into a house of their own.

Solness.

Yes, yes—we know all that! And so they are content to take whatever is offered them. They get a—a roof over their heads—an address—but nothing to call a home. No thank you! In that case, let them apply to somebody else. Tell them that, the next time they call.

Brovik.

[Pushes his glasses up on to his forehead and looks in astonishment at him.] To somebody else? Are you prepared to give up the commission?

Solness.

[Impatiently.] Yes, yes, yes, devil take it! If that is to be the way of it—. Rather that, than build away at random. [Vehemently.] Besides, I know very little about these people as yet.

Brovik.

The people are safe enough. Ragnar knows them. He is a friend of the family. Perfectly safe people.

Solness.

Oh, safe—safe enough! That is not at all what I mean. Good lord—don't you understand me either? [Angrily.] I won't have anything to do with these strangers. They may apply to whom they please, so far as I am concerned.

Brovik.

[Rising.] Do you really mean that?

Solness.

[Sulkily.] Yes I do.—For once in a way.

[He comes forward.]

[Brovik exchanges a glance with Ragnar, who makes a warning gesture. Then Brovik comes into the front room.]
Brovik.

May I have a few words with you?

Solness.

Certainly.

Brovik.

[To Kaia.] Just go in there for a moment, Kaia.

Kaia.

[Uneasily.] Oh, but uncle——

Brovik.

Do as I say, child. And shut the door after you.

[Kaia goes reluctantly into the draughtsmen’s office, glances anxiously and imploringly at Solness, and shuts the door.

Brovik.

[Lowering his voice a little.] I don’t want the poor children to know how ill I am.

Solness.

Yes, you have been looking very poorly of late.

Brovik.

It will soon be all over with me. My strength is ebbing—from day to day.

Solness.

Won’t you sit down?
Brovik.

Thanks—may I?

Solness.

[Placing the arm-chair more conveniently.] Here—take this chair.—And now?

Brovik.

[Has seated himself with difficulty.] Well, you see, it's about Ragnar. That is what weighs most upon me. What is to become of him?

Solness.

Of course your son will stay with me as long as ever he likes.

Brovik.

But that is just what he does not like. He feels that he cannot stay here any longer.

Solness.

Why, I should say he was very well off here. But if he wants more money, I should not mind—

Brovik.

No, no! It is not that. [Impatiently.] But sooner or later he, too, must have a chance of doing something on his own account.

Solness.

[Without looking at him.] Do you think that Ragnar has quite talent enough to stand alone?
No, that is just the heartbreaking part of it—I have begun to have my doubts about the boy. For you have never said so much as—as one encouraging word about him. And yet I cannot but think there must be something in him—he can’t be without talent.

Solness.

Well, but he has learnt nothing—nothing thoroughly, I mean. Except, of course, to draw.

Brovik.

[Looks at him with covert hatred, and says hoarsely.] You had learned little enough of the business when you were in my employment. But that did not prevent you from setting to work—[breathing with difficulty]—and pushing your way up, and taking the wind out of my sails—mine, and so many other people’s.

Solness.

Yes, you see—circumstances favoured me.

Brovik.

You are right there. Everything favoured you. But then how can you have the heart to let me go to my grave—without having seen what Ragnar is fit for? And of course I am anxious to see them married, too—before I go.

Solness.

[Sharply.] Is it she who wishes it?
Brovik.

Not Kaia so much as Ragnar—he talks about it every day. [Appealingly.] You must—you must help him to get some independent work now! I must see something that the lad has done. Do you hear?

Solness.

[Peevishly.] Hang it, man, you can’t expect me to drag commissions down from the moon for him!

Brovik.

He has the chance of a capital commission at this very moment. A big bit of work.

Solness.

[Uneasily, startled.] Has he?

Brovik.

If you would give your consent.

Solness.

What sort of work do you mean?

Brovik.

[With some hesitation.] He can have the building of that villa out at Lövstrand.

Solness.

That! Why I am going to build that myself.
MODESTO.

Oh, you don't much care about doing it.

SOLNESS.

[Flaring up.] Don't care! I! Who dares to say that?

BROVIK.

You said so yourself just now.

SOLNESS.

Oh, never mind what I said.—Would they give Ragnar the building of that villa?

BROVIK.

Yes. You see, he knows the family. And then—just for the fun of the thing—he has made drawings and estimates and so forth—

SOLNESS.

Are they pleased with the drawings? The people who will have to live in the house?

BROVIK.

Yes. If you would only look through them and approve of them—

SOLNESS.

Then they would let Ragnar build their home for them?

BROVIK.

They were immensely pleased with his idea. They thought it exceedingly original, they said.
THE MASTER BUILDER

[ACT 1]

Solness.

Oho! Original! Not the old-fashioned stuff that I am in the habit of turning out!

Brovik.

It seemed to them different.

Solness.

[With suppressed irritation.] So it was to see Ragnar that they came here—whilst I was out!

Brovik.

They came to call upon you—and at the same time to ask whether you would mind retiring—

Solness.

[Angrily.] Retire? I?

Brovik.

In case you thought that Ragnar’s drawings—

Solness.

I! Retire in favour of your son!

Brovik.

Retire from the agreement, they meant.

Solness.

Oh, it comes to the same thing. [Laughs angrily.] So that is it, is it? Halvard Solness is to see about retiring now! To make room for younger men! For the very youngest, perhaps! He must make room! Room! Room!

Brovik.

Why, good heavens! there is surely room for more than one single man——

Solness.

Oh, there's not so very much room to spare either. But, be that as it may—I will never retire! I will never give way to anybody! Never of my own free will. Never in this world will I do that!

Brovik.

[Rises with difficulty.] Then I am to pass out of life without any certainty? Without a gleam of happiness? Without any faith or trust in Ragnar? Without having seen a single piece of work of his doing? Is that to be the way of it?

Solness.

[Turns half aside, and mutters.] H'm—don't ask more just now.

Brovik.

I must have an answer to this one question. Am I to pass out of life in such utter poverty?

Solness.

[Seems to struggle with himself; finally he says, in a low but firm voice:] You must pass out of life as best you can.
Brovik.

Then be it so. [He goes up the room.

Solness.

[Following him, half in desperation.] Don’t you understand that I cannot help it? I am what I am, and I cannot change my nature!

Brovik.

No, no; I suppose you can’t. [Reels and supports himself against the sofa-table.] May I have a glass of water?

Solness.

By all means. [Fills a glass and hands it to him.

Brovik.

Thanks. [Drinks and puts the glass down again. [Solness goes up and opens the door of the draughts-men’s office.

Solness.

Ragnar— you must come and take your father home.

Ragnar rises quickly. He and Kaia come into the work-room.

Ragnar.

What is the matter, father?

Brovik.

Give me your arm. Now let us go.
Ragnar.

Very well. You had better put your things on, too, Kaia.

Solness.

Miss Fosli must stay—just for a moment. There is a letter I want written.

Brovik.

[Looks at Solness.] Good night. Sleep well—if you can.

Solness.

Good night.

[Brovik and Ragnar go out by the hall-door. Kaia goes to the desk. Solness stands with bent head, to the right, by the arm-chair.

Kaia.

[Dubiously.] Is there any letter——?

Solness.

[Curtly.] No, of course not. [Looks sternly at her.] Kaia!

Kaia.

[Anxiously, in a low voice.] Yes!

Solness.

[Points imperatively to a spot on the floor.] Come here! At once!

Kaia.

[Hesitantly.] Yes.
Solness.

[As before.] Nearer!

Kaia.

[Obeying.] What do you want with me?

Solness.

[Looks at her for a while.] Is it you I have to thank for all this?

Kaia.

No, no, don’t think that!

Solness.

But confess now—you want to get married!

Kaia.

[Softly.] Ragnar and I have been engaged for four or five years, and so——

Solness.

And so you think it time there were an end of it. Is not that so?

Kaia.

Ragnar and Uncle say I must. So I suppose I shall have to give in.

Solness.

[More gently.] Kaia, don’t you really care a little bit for Ragnar, too?
Kaia.

I cared very much for Ragnar once—before I came here to you.

Solness.

But you don’t now? Not in the least?

Kaia.

[Passionately, clasping her hands and holding them out towards him.] Oh, you know very well there is only one person I care for now! One, and one only, in all the world! I shall never care for any one else.

Solness.

Yes, you say that. And yet you go away from me—leave me alone here with everything on my hands.

Kaia.

But could I not stay with you, even if Ragnar——?

Solness.

[Repudiating the idea.] No, no, that is quite impossible. If Ragnar leaves me and starts work on his own account, then of course he will need you himself.

Kaia.

[Wringing her hands.] Oh, I feel as if I could not be separated from you! It’s quite, quite impossible!

Solness.

Then be sure you get those foolish notions out of Ragnar’s head. Marry him as much as you please—[Alters his tone.] I mean—don’t let him throw up his good situation with me. For then I can keep you too, my dear Kaia.

Kaia.

Oh yes, how lovely that would be, if it could only be managed!

Solness.

[Clasps her head with his two hands and whispers.] For I cannot get on without you, you see. I must have you with me every single day.

Kaia.

[In nervous exaltation.] My God! My God!

Solness.

[Kisses her hair.] Kaia—Kaia!

Kaia.

[Sinks down before him.] Oh, how good you are to me! How unspeakably good you are!

Solness.

[Vehemently.] Get up! For goodness’ sake get up! I think I hear some one!

[He helps her to rise. She staggers over to the desk.]

Mrs. Solness enters by the door on the right. She looks thin and wasted with grief, but shows traces of bygone beauty. Blonde ringlets. Dressed with good taste, wholly in black. Speaks somewhat slowly and in a plaintive voice.
[In the doorway.] Halvard!

Mrs. Solness.

Solness.

[Turns.] Oh, are you there, my dear—-?

Mrs. Solness.

[With a glance at Kaia.] I am afraid I am disturbing you.

Solness.

Not in the least. Miss Fosli has only a short letter to write.

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, so I see.

Solness.

What do you want with me, Aline?

Mrs. Solness.

I merely wanted to tell you that Dr. Herdal is in the drawing-room. Won't you come and see him, Halvard?

Solness.

[Looks suspiciously at her.] H'm—is the doctor so very anxious to talk to me?

Mrs. Solness.

Well, not exactly anxious. He really came to see me; but he would like to say how-do-you-do to you at the same time.
Solness.

[Laughs to himself.] Yes, I daresay. Well, you must ask him to wait a little.

Mrs. Solness.

Then you will come in presently?

Solness.

Perhaps I will. Presently, presently, dear. In a little while.

Mrs. Solness.

[Glancing again at Kaia.] Well now, don't forget, Halvard. [Withdraws and closes the door behind her.]

Kaia.

[Softly.] Oh dear, oh dear—I am sure Mrs. Solness thinks ill of me in some way!

Solness.

Oh, not in the least. Not more than usual at any rate. But all the same, you had better go now, Kaia.

Kaia.

Yes, yes, now I must go.

Solness.

[Severely.] And mind you get that matter settled for me. Do you hear?

Kaia.

Oh, if it only depended on me——
Solness.

I will have it settled, I say! And to-morrow too—not a day later!

Kaia.

[Terrified.] If there’s nothing else for it, I am quite willing to break off the engagement.

Solness.

[Angrily.] Break it off. Are you mad? Would you think of breaking it off?

Kaia.

[Distracted.] Yes, if necessary. For I must—I must stay here with you! I can’t leave you! That is utterly—utterly impossible!

Solness.

[With a sudden outburst.] But deuce take it—how about Ragnar then! It’s Ragnar that I—

Kaia.

[Looks at him with terrified eyes.] It is chiefly on Ragnar’s account, that—that you——?

Solness.

[Collecting himself.] No, no, of course not! You don’t understand me either. [Gently and softly.] Of course it is you I want to keep—you above everything, Kaia. But for that very reason, you must prevent Ragnar, too, from throwing up his situation. There, there,—now go home.
Kaia.

Yes, yes—good-night, then.

Solness.

Good-night. [As she is going.] Oh, stop a moment! Are Ragnar’s drawings in there?

Kaia.

I did not see him take them with him.

Solness.

Then just go and find them for me. I might perhaps glance over them, after all.

Kaia.

[Happy.] Oh yes, please do!

Solness.

For your sake, Kaia dear. Now, let me have them at once, please.

[Kaia hurries into the draughtsmen’s office, searches anxiously in the table-drawer, finds a portfolio and brings it with her.

Kaia.

Here are all the drawings.

Solness.

Good. Put them down there on the table.
ACT I]  THE MASTER BUILDER  267

KAIA.

[Putting down the portfolio.] Good-night, then. [Beseechingly.] And please, please think kindly of me.

SOLNESS.

Oh, that I always do. Good-night, my dear little Kaia. [Glances to the right.] Go, go now!

MRS. SOLNESS and DR. HERDAL enter by the door on the right. He is a stoutish, elderly man, with a round, good-humoured face, clean shaven, with thin, light hair, and gold spectacles.

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Still in the doorway.] Halvard, I cannot keep the doctor any longer.

SOLNESS.

Well then, come in here.

MRS. SOLNESS.

[To KAIA, who is turning down the desk-lamp.] Have you finished the letter already, Miss Fosli?

KAIA.

[In confusion.] The letter——?

SOLNESS.

Yes, it was quite a short one.

MRS. SOLNESS.

It must have been very short.
You may go now, Miss Fosli. And please come in good time to-morrow morning.

I will be sure to. Good-night, Mrs. Solness.

She must be quite an acquisition to you, Halvard, this Miss Fosli.

Yes, indeed. She is useful in all sorts of ways.

So it seems

Is she good at book-keeping too?

Well—of course she has had a good deal of practice during these two years. And then she is so nice and willing to do whatever one asks of her.

Yes, that must be very delightful—

It is. Especially when one is not too much accustomed to that sort of thing.
MRS. SOLNESS.

[In a tone of gentle remonstrance.] Can you say that, Halvard?

SOLNESS.

Oh, no, no, my dear Aline; I beg your pardon.

MRS. SOLNESS.

There's no occasion.—Well then, doctor, you will come back later on, and have a cup of tea with us?

DR. HERDAL.

I have only that one patient to see, and then I'll come back.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Thank you. [She goes out by the door on the right.

SOLNESS.

Are you in a hurry, doctor?

DR. HERDAL.

No, not at all.

SOLNESS.

May I have a little chat with you?

DR. HERDAL.

With the greatest of pleasure.

SOLNESS.

Then let us sit down. [He motions the doctor to take the rocking-chair, and sits down himself in the arm-chair.
"Looks searchingly at him."] Tell me—did you notice anything odd about Aline?

DR. HERDAL.

Do you mean just now, when she was here?

SOLNESS.

Yes, in her manner to me. Did you notice anything?

DR. HERDAL.

[Smiling.] Well, I admit—one couldn’t well avoid noticing that your wife—h’m—

SOLNESS.

Well?

DR. HERDAL.

—that your wife is not particularly fond of this Miss Fosli.

SOLNESS.

Is that all? I have noticed that myself.

DR. HERDAL.

And I must say I am scarcely surprised at it.

SOLNESS.

At what?

DR. HERDAL.

That she should not exactly approve of your seeing so much of another woman, all day and every day.
Solness.

No, no, I suppose you are right there—and Aline too. But it’s impossible to make any change.

Dr. Herdal.

Could you not engage a clerk?

Solness.

The first man that came to hand? No, thank you—that would never do for me.

Dr. Herdal.

But now, if your wife—? Suppose, with her delicate health, all this tries her too much?

Solness.

Even then—I might almost say—it can make no difference. I must keep Kaia Fosli. No one else could fill her place.

Dr. Herdal.

No one else?

Solness.

[Curtly.] No, no one.

Dr. Herdal.

[Drawing his chair closer.] Now listen to me, my dear Mr. Solness. May I ask you a question, quite between ourselves?
Solness.

By all means.

Dr. Herdal.

Women, you see—in certain matters, they have a deucedly keen intuition——

Solness.

They have, indeed. There is not the least doubt of that. But——?

Dr. Herdal.

Well, tell me now—if your wife can't endure this Kaia Fosli——?

Solness.

Well, what then?

Dr. Herdal.

—may she not have just—just the least little bit of reason for this instinctive dislike?

Solness.

[Looks at him and rises.] Oho!

Dr. Herdal.

Now don't be offended—but hasn't she?

Solness.

[With curt decision.] No.

Dr. Herdal.

No reason of any sort?
SOLNESS.

No other reason than her own suspicious nature.

DR. HERDAL.

I know you have known a good many women in your time.

SOLNESS.

Yes, I have.

DR. HERDAL.

And have been a good deal taken with some of them, too.

SOLNESS.

Oh yes, I don’t deny it.

DR. HERDAL.

But as regards Miss Fosli, then? There is nothing of that sort in the case?

SOLNESS.

No; nothing at all—on my side.

DR. HERDAL.

But on her side?

SOLNESS.

I don’t think you have any right to ask that question, doctor.

DR. HERDAL.

Well, you know, we were discussing your wife’s intuition.
Solness.

So we were. And for that matter—[lowers his voice]—Aline's intuition, as you call it—in a certain sense, it has not been so far astray.

Dr. Herdal.

Aha! there we have it!

Solness.

[Sits down.] Doctor Herdal—I am going to tell you a strange story—if you care to listen to it.

Dr. Herdal.

I like listening to strange stories.

Solness.

Very well then. I daresay you recollect that I took Knut Brovik and his son into my employment—after the old man's business had gone to the dogs.

Dr. Herdal.

Yes, so I have understood.

Solness.

You see, they really are clever fellows, these two. Each of them has talent in his own way. But then the son took it into his head to get engaged; and the next thing, of course, was that he wanted to get married—and begin to build on his own account. That is the way with all these young people.
[Laughing.] Yes, they have a bad habit of wanting to marry.

Solness.

Just so. But of course that did not suit my plans; for I needed Ragnar myself—and the old man too. He is exceedingly good at calculating bearing-strains and cubic contents—and all that sort of deviltry, you know.

Dr. Herdal.

Oh yes, no doubt that’s indispensable.

Solness.

Yes, it is. But Ragnar was absolutely bent on setting to work for himself. He would hear of nothing else.

Dr. Herdal.

But he has stayed with you all the same.

Solness.

Yes, I’ll tell you how that came about. One day this girl, Kaia Fosli, came to see them on some errand or other. She had never been here before. And when I saw how utterly infatuated they were with each other, the thought occurred to me: if I could only get her into the office here, then perhaps Ragnar too would stay where he is.

Dr. Herdal.

That was not at all a bad idea.
Solness.

Yes, but at the time I did not breathe a word of what was in my mind. I merely stood and looked at her—and kept on wishing intently that I could have her here. Then I talked to her a little, in a friendly way—about one thing and another. And then she went away.

Dr. Herdal.

Well?

Solness.

Well then, next day, pretty late in the evening, when old Brovik and Ragnar had gone home, she came here again, and behaved as if I had made an arrangement with her.

Dr. Herdal.

An arrangement? What about?

Solness.

About the very thing my mind had been fixed on. But I hadn't said one single word about it.

Dr. Herdal.

That was most extraordinary.

Solness.

Yes, was it not? And now she wanted to know what she was to do here—whether she could begin the very next morning, and so forth.

Dr. Herdal.

Don't you think she did it in order to be with her sweetheart?
That was what occurred to me at first. But no, that was not it. She seemed to drift quite away from him—when once she had come here to me.

She drifted over to you, then?

Yes, entirely. If I happen to look at her when her back is turned, I can tell that she feels it. She quivers and trembles the moment I come near her. What do you think of that?

H'm—that's not very hard to explain.

Well, but what about the other thing? That she believed I had said to her what I had only wished and willed—silently—inwardly—to myself? What do you say to that? Can you explain that, Dr. Herdal?

No, I won't undertake to do that.

I felt sure you would not; and so I have never cared to talk about it till now.—But it's a cursed nuisance to me in the long run, you understand. Here have I got to go on day after day pretending—— And it's a shame to treat her so, too, poor girl.  [vehemently.]  But I cannot do anything else.  For if she runs away from me—then Ragnar will be off too.

Dr. Herdal.

And you have not told your wife the rights of the story?

Solness.

No.

Dr. Herdal.

Then why on earth don't you?

Solness.

[Looks fixedly at him, and says in a low voice:]  Because I seem to find a sort of—of salutary self-torture in allowing Aline to do me an injustice.

Dr. Herdal.

[Shakes his head.]  I don't in the least understand what you mean.

Solness.

Well, you see—it is like paying off a little bit of a huge, immeasurable debt——

Dr. Herdal.

To your wife?

Solness.

Yes; and that always helps to relieve one's mind a little.  One can breathe more freely for a while, you understand.
Dr. Herdal.

No, goodness knows, I don’t understand at all——

Solness.

[Breaking off, rises again.] Well, well, well—then we won’t talk any more about it. [He saunters across the room, returns, and stops beside the table. Looks at the doctor with a sly smile.] I suppose you think you have drawn me out nicely now, doctor?

Dr. Herdal.

[With some irritation.] Drawn you out? Again I have not the faintest notion what you mean, Mr. Solness.

Solness.

Oh come, out with it; I have seen it quite clearly, you know.

Dr. Herdal.

What have you seen?

Solness.

[In a low voice, slowly.] That you have been quietly keeping an eye upon me.

Dr. Herdal.

That I have! And why in all the world should I do that?

Solness.

Because you think that I——. [Passionately.] Well, devil take it—you think the same of me as Aline does.
Dr. Herdal.

And what does she think about you?

Solness.

[Having recovered his self-control.] She has begun to think that I am—that I am—ill.

Dr. Herdal.

Ill! You! She has never hinted such a thing to me. Why, what can she think is the matter with you?

Solness.

[Leans over the back of the chair and whispers.] Aline has made up her mind that I am mad. That is what she thinks.

Dr. Herdal.

[Rising.] Why, my dear good fellow——!

Solness.

Yes, on my soul she does! I tell you it is so. And she has got you to think the same! Oh, I can assure you, doctor, I see it in your face as clearly as possible. You don't take me in so easily, I can tell you.

Dr. Herdal.

[Looks at him in amazement.] Never, Mr. Solness—never has such a thought entered my mind.

Solness.

[With an incredulous smile.] Really? Has it not?
Dr. Herdal.

No, never! Nor your wife's mind either, I am convinced. I could almost swear to that.

Solness.

Well, I wouldn't advise you to. For, in a certain sense, you see, perhaps—perhaps she is not so far wrong in thinking something of the kind.

Dr. Herdal.

Come now, I really must say——

Solness.

[Interrupting, with a sweep of his hand.] Well, well, my dear doctor—don't let us discuss this any further. We had better agree to differ. [Changes to a tone of quiet amusement.] But look here now, doctor—h'm——

Dr. Herdal.

Well?

Solness.

Since you don't believe that I am—ill—and crazy—and mad, and so forth——

Dr. Herdal.

What then?

Solness.

Then I daresay you fancy that I am an extremely happy man.
Dr. Herdal.

Is that mere fancy?

Solness.

[Laughs.] No, no—of course not! Heaven forbid! Only think—to be Solness the master builder! Halvard Solness! What could be more delightful?

Dr. Herdal.

Yes, I must say it seems to me you have had the luck on your side to an astounding degree.

Solness.

[ Suppresses a gloomy smile.] So I have. I can't complain on that score.

Dr. Herdal.

First of all that grim old robbers' castle was burnt down for you. And that was certainly a great piece of luck.

Solness.

[Seriously.] It was the home of Aline's family. Remember that.

Dr. Herdal.

Yes, it must have been a great grief to her.

Solness.

She has not got over it to this day—not in all these twelve or thirteen years.
Dr. Herdal.

Ah, but what followed must have been the worst blow for her.

Solness.

The one thing with the other.

Dr. Herdal.

But you—yourself—you rose upon the ruins. You began as a poor boy from a country village—and now you are at the head of your profession. Ah, yes, Mr. Solness, you have undoubtedly had the luck on your side.

Solness.

[Looking at him with embarrassment.] Yes, but that is just what makes me so horribly afraid.

Dr. Herdal.

Afraid? Because you have the luck on your side!

Solness.

It terrifies me—terrifies me every hour of the day. For sooner or later the luck must turn, you see.

Dr. Herdal.

Oh nonsense! What should make the luck turn?

Solness.

[With firm assurance.] The younger generation.
Dr. Herdal.

Pooh! The younger generation! You are not laid on the shelf yet, I should hope. Oh no—your position here is probably firmer now than it has ever been.

Solness.

The luck will turn. I know it—I feel the day approaching. Some one or other will take it into his head to say: Give me a chance! And then all the rest will come clamouring after him, and shake their fists at me and shout: Make room—make room—make room! Yes, just you see, doctor—presently the younger generation will come knocking at my door—

Dr. Herdal.

[Laughing.] Well, and what if they do?

Solness.

What if they do? Then there's an end of Halvard Solness. [There is a knock at the door on the left.]

Solness.

[Starts.] What's that? Did you not hear something?

Dr. Herdal.

Some one is knocking at the door.

Solness.

[Loudly.] Come in.

Hilda Wangel enters by the hall door. She is of middle height, supple, and delicately built. Somewhat sunburnt. Dressed in a tourist costume, with skirt caught up for walking, a sailor’s collar open at the throat, and a small sailor hat on her head. Knapsack on back, plaid in strap, and alpenstock.

HILDA.

[Goes straight up to Solness, her eyes sparkling with happiness.] Good evening!

Solness.

[Looks doubtfully at her.] Good evening—

HILDA.

[Laughs.] I almost believe you don’t recognise me!

Solness.

No—I must admit that—just for the moment—

Dr. Herdal.

[Approaching.] But I recognise you, my dear young lady—

HILDA.

[Pleased.] Oh, is it you that—

Dr. Herdal.

Of course it is. [To Solness.] We met at one of the mountain stations this summer. [To Hilda.] What became of the other ladies?

HILDA.

Oh, they went westward.
Dr. Herdal.

They didn't much like all the fun we used to have in the evenings.

Hilda.

No, I believe they didn't.

Dr. Herdal.

[Holds up his finger at her.] And I am afraid it can't be denied that you flirted a little with us.

Hilda.

Well, that was better fun than to sit there knitting stockings with all those old women.

Dr. Herdal.

[Laughs.] There I entirely agree with you!

Solness.

Have you come to town this evening?

Hilda.

Yes, I have just arrived.

Dr. Herdal.

Quite alone, Miss Wangel?

Hilda.

Oh yes!

Solness.

Wangel? Is your name Wangel?
HILDA. [Looks in amused surprise at him.] Yes, of course it is.

SOLNESS.

Then you must be a daughter of the district doctor up at Lysanger?

HILDA. [As before.] Yes, who else's daughter should I be?

SOLNESS.

Oh, then I suppose we met up there, that summer when I was building a tower on the old church.

HILDA. [More seriously.] Yes, of course it was then we met.

SOLNESS.

Well, that is a long time ago.

HILDA. [Looks hard at him.] It is exactly the ten years.

SOLNESS.

You must have been a mere child then, I should think.

HILDA. [Carelessly.] Well, I was twelve or thirteen.

DR. HERDAL.

Is this the first time you have ever been up to town, Miss Wangel?
HILDA.

Yes, it is indeed.

SOLNESS.

And don’t you know any one here?

HILDA.

Nobody but you. And of course, your wife.

SOLNESS.

So you know her, too?

HILDA.

Only a little. We spent a few days together at the sanatorium.

SOLNESS.

Ah, up there?

HILDA.

She said I might come and pay her a visit if ever I came up to town. [Smiles.] Not that that was necessary.

SOLNESS.

Odd that she should never have mentioned it.

[HILDA puts her stick down by the stove, takes off the knapsack and lays it and the plaid on the sofa. DR. HERDAL offers to help her. SOLNESS stands and gazes at her.

HILDA.

[Going towards him.] Well, now I must ask you to let me stay the night here.
SOLNESS.

I am sure there will be no difficulty about that.

HILDA.

For I have no other clothes than those I stand in, except a change of linen in my knapsack. And that has to go to the wash, for it's very dirty.

SOLNESS.

Oh yes, that can be managed. Now I'll just let my wife know—

DR. HERDAL.

Meanwhile I will go and see my patient.

SOLNESS.

Yes, do; and come again later on.

DR. HERDAL.

[Playfully, with a glance at HILDA.] Oh that I will, you may be very certain! [Laughs.] So your prediction has come true, Mr. Solness!

SOLNESS.

How so?

DR. HERDAL.

The younger generation did come knocking at your door.

SOLNESS.

[Cheerfully.] Yes, but in a very different way from what I meant.
Dr. Herdal.

Very different, yes. That's undeniable.

[He goes out by the hall-door. Solness opens the door on the right and speaks into the side room.

Solness.

Aline! Will you come in here, please. Here is a friend of yours—Miss Wangel.

Mrs. Solness.

[Appears in the doorway.] Who do you say it is? [Sees Hilda.] Oh, is it you, Miss Wangel? [Goes up to her and offers her hand.] So you have come to town after all.

Solness.

Miss Wangel has this moment arrived; and she would like to stay the night here.

Mrs. Solness.

Here with us? Oh yes, certainly.

Solness.

Till she can get her things a little in order, you know.

Mrs. Solness.

I will do the best I can for you. It's no more than my duty. I suppose your trunk is coming on later?

Hilda.

I have no trunk.
MRS. SOLNESS.

Well, it will be all right, I daresay. In the meantime, you must excuse my leaving you here with my husband, until I can get a room made a little comfortable for you.

SOLNESS.

Can we not give her one of the nurseries? They are all ready as it is.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh yes. There we have room and to spare. [To HILDA.] Sit down now, and rest a little.

[She goes out to the right.]

[HILDA, with her hands behind her back, strolls about the room and looks at various objects. SOLNESS stands in front, beside the table, also with his hands behind his back, and follows her with his eyes.]

HILDA.

[Stops and looks at him.] Have you several nurseries?

SOLNESS.

There are three nurseries in the house.

HILDA.

That's a lot. Then I suppose you have a great many children?

SOLNESS.

No. We have no child. But now you can be the child here, for the time being.
HILDA.

For to-night, yes. I shall not cry. I mean to sleep as sound as a stone.

SOLNESS.

Yes, you must be very tired, I should think.

HILDA.

Oh no! But all the same——. It's so delicious to lie and dream.

SOLNESS.

Do you dream much of nights?

HILDA.

Oh yes! Almost always.

SOLNESS.

What do you dream about most?

HILDA.

I sha'n't tell you to-night. Another time, perhaps.
[She again strolls about the room, stops at the desk and turns over the books and papers a little.]

SOLNESS.

[Approaching.] Are you searching for anything?

HILDA.

No, I am merely looking at all these things.  [Turns.] Perhaps I mustn't?
SOLNESS.

Oh, by all means.

HILDA.

Is it you that write in this great ledger?

SOLNESS.

No, it’s my book-keeper.

HILDA.

Is it a woman?

SOLNESS.

[Smiles.] Yes.

HILDA.

One you employ here, in your office?

SOLNESS.

Yes.

HILDA.

Is she married?

SOLNESS.

No, she is single.

HILDA.

Oh, indeed!

SOLNESS.

But I believe she is soon going to be married.

HILDA.

That’s a good thing for her.
But not such a good thing for me. For then I shall have nobody to help me.

Can't you get hold of some one else who will do just as well?

Perhaps you would stay here and—and write in the ledger?

[Measures him with a glance.] Yes, I daresay! No, thank you—nothing of that sort for me.

[She again strolls across the room, and sits down in the rocking-chair. Solness too goes to the table.]

For there must surely be plenty of other things to be done here. [Looks smilingly at him.] Don't you think so, too?

Of course. First of all, I suppose, you want to make a round of the shops, and get yourself up in the height of fashion.

[Amused.] No, I think I shall let that alone!

Indeed?
HILDA.

For you must know I have run through all my money.

SOLNESS.

[Laughs.] Neither trunk nor money, then!

HILDA.

Neither one nor the other. But never mind—it doesn’t matter now.

SOLNESS.

Come now, I like you for that.

HILDA.

Only for that?

SOLNESS.

For that among other things. [Sits in the arm-chair.] Is your father alive still?

HILDA.

Yes, father’s alive.

SOLNESS.

Perhaps you are thinking of studying here?

HILDA.

No, that hadn’t occurred to me.

SOLNESS.

But I suppose you will be staying for some time?
HILDA.

That must depend upon circumstances. [She sits awhile rocking herself and looking at him, half seriously, half with a suppressed smile. Then she takes off her hat and puts it on the table in front of her.] Mr. Solness!

SOLNESS.

Well?

HILDA.

Have you a very bad memory?

SOLNESS.

A bad memory? No, not that I am aware of.

HILDA.

Then have you nothing to say to me about what happened up there?

SOLNESS.

[In momentary surprise.] Up at Lysanger? [Indifferently.] Why, it was nothing much to talk about, it seems to me.

HILDA.

[Looks reproachfully at him.] How can you sit there and say such things?

SOLNESS.

Well, then, you talk to me about it.

HILDA.

When the tower was finished, we had grand doings in the town.
Solness.

Yes, I shall not easily forget that day.

Hilda.

[Smiles.] Will you not? That comes well from you.

Solness.

Comes well?

Hilda.

There was music in the churchyard—and many, many hundreds of people. We school-girls were dressed in white; and we all carried flags.

Solness.

Ah yes, those flags—I can tell you I remember them!

Hilda.

Then you climbed right up the scaffolding, straight to the very top; and you had a great wreath with you; and you hung that wreath right away up on the weather-vane.

Solness.

[Curtly interrupting.] I always did that in those days. It is an old custom.

Hilda.

It was so wonderfully thrilling to stand below and look up at you. Fancy, if he should fall over! He—the master builder himself!
Solness.

[As if to divert her from the subject.] Yes, yes, yes, that might very well have happened, too. For one of those white-frocked little devils,—she went on in such a way, and screamed up at me so——

Hilda.

[Sparkling with pleasure.] "Hurra for Master Builder Solness!" Yes!

Solness.

—and waved and flourished with her flag, so that I—so that it almost made me giddy to look at it.

Hilda.

[In a lower voice, seriously.] That little devil—that was I.

Solness.

[Fixes his eyes steadily upon her.] I am sure of that now. It must have been you.

Hilda.

[Lively again.] Oh, it was so gloriously thrilling! I could not have believed there was a builder in the whole world that could build such a tremendously high tower. And then, that you yourself should stand at the very top of it, as large as life! And that you should not be the least bit dizzy! It was that above everything that made one—made one dizzy to think of.

Solness.

How could you be so certain that I was not——?
Hilda.

[Scouting the idea.] No indeed! Oh no! I knew that instinctively. For if you had been, you could never have stood up there and sung.

Solness.

[Looks at her in astonishment.] Sung? Did I sing?

Hilda.

Yes, I should think you did.

Solness.

[Shakes his head.] I have never sung a note in my life.

Hilda.

Yes indeed, you sang then. It sounded like harps in the air.

Solness.

[Thoughtfully.] This is very strange—all this.

Hilda.

[Is silent awhile, looks at him and says in a low voice:] But then,—it was after that—that the real thing happened.

Solness.

The real thing?

Hilda.

[Sparkling with vivacity.] Yes, I surely don’t need to remind you of that?
SOLNESS.

Oh yes, do remind me a little of that, too.

HILDA.

Don't you remember that a great dinner was given in your honour at the Club?

SOLNESS.

Yes, to be sure. It must have been the same afternoon, for I left the place next morning.

HILDA.

And from the Club you were invited to come round to our house to supper.

SOLNESS.

Quite right, Miss Wangel. It is wonderful how all these trifles have impressed themselves on your mind.

HILDA.

Trifles! I like that! Perhaps it was a trifle, too, that I was alone in the room when you came in?

SOLNESS.

Were you alone?

HILDA.

[Without answering him.] You didn't call me a little devil then?

SOLNESS.

No, I suppose I did not.
HILDA.

You said I was lovely in my white dress, and that I looked like a little princess.

SOLNESS.

I have no doubt you did, Miss Wangel.—And besides—I was feeling so buoyant and free that day——

HILDA.

And then you said that when I grew up I should be your princess.

SOLNESS.

[Laughing a little.] Dear, dear—did I say that too?

HILDA.

Yes, you did. And when I asked how long I should have to wait, you said that you would come again in ten years—like a troll—and carry me off—to Spain or some such place. And you promised you would buy me a kingdom there.

SOLNESS.

[As before.] Yes, after a good dinner one doesn’t haggle about the halfpence. But did I really say all that?

HILDA.

[Laughs to herself.] Yes. And you told me, too, what the kingdom was to be called.

SOLNESS.

Well, what was it?
HILDA.

It was to be called the kingdom of Orangia,¹ you said.

SOLNESS.

Well, that was an appetising name.

HILDA.

No, I didn’t like it a bit; for it seemed as though you wanted to make game of me.

SOLNESS.

I am sure that cannot have been my intention.

HILDA.

No, I should hope not—considering what you did next—

SOLNESS.

What in the world did I do next?

HILDA.

Well, that’s the finishing touch, if you have forgotten that too. I should have thought no one could help remembering such a thing as that.

SOLNESS.

Yes, yes, just give me a hint, and then perhaps—Well?

¹ In the original “Appelsinia,” “appelsin” meaning “orange.”
HILDA.

[Looks fixedly at him.] You came and kissed me, Mr. Solness.

SOLNESS.

[Open-mouthed, rising from his chair.] I did!

HILDA.

Yes, indeed you did. You took me in both your arms, and bent my head back, and kissed me—many times.

SOLNESS.

Now really, my dear Miss Wangel——!

HILDA.

[Rises.] You surely cannot mean to deny it?

SOLNESS.

Yes, I do. I deny it altogether!

HILDA.

[Looks scornfully at him.] Oh, indeed!

[She turns and goes slowly close up to the stove, where she remains standing motionless, her face averted from him, her hands behind her back. Short pause.

SOLNESS.

[ Goes cautiously up behind her.] Miss Wangel——!

HILDA.

[Is silent and does not move.]
SOLNESS.

Don't stand there like a statue. You must have dreamt all this. [Lays his hand on her arm.] Now just listen—

HILDA.

[Makes an impatient movement with her arm.]

SOLNESS.

[As a thought flashes upon him.] Or—! Wait a moment! There is something under all this, you may depend!

HILDA.

[Does not move.]

SOLNESS.

HILDA.

[Is still silent.]

SOLNESS.

[Impatiently.] Oh very well, deuce take it all—then I did do it, I suppose.

HILDA.

[Turns her head a little, but without looking at him.] Then you admit it now?

SOLNESS.

Yes—whatever you like.
HILDA.

You came and put your arms round me?

SOLNESS.

Oh yes!

HILDA.

And bent my head back?

SOLNESS.

Very far back.

HILDA.

And kissed me?

SOLNESS.

Yes, I did.

HILDA.

Many times?

SOLNESS.

As many as ever you like.

HILDA.

[Turns quickly towards him and has once more the sparkling expression of gladness in her eyes.] Well, you see, I got it out of you at last!

SOLNESS.

[With a slight smile.] Yes—just think of my forgetting such a thing as that.

HILDA.

[Again a little sulky, retreats from him.] Oh, you have kissed so many people in your time, I suppose.
No, you mustn’t think that of me. [Hilda seats herself in the arm-chair. Solness stands and leans against the rocking-chair. Looks observantly at her.] Miss Wangel!

Hilda. Yes!

Solness. How was it now? What came of all this—between us two?

Hilda. Why, nothing more came of it. You know that quite well. For then the other guests came in, and then—bah!

Solness. Quite so! The others came in. To think of my forgetting that too!

Hilda. Oh, you haven’t really forgotten anything: you are only a little ashamed of it all. I am sure one doesn’t forget things of that kind.

Solness. No, one would suppose not.

Hilda. [Lively again, looks at him.] Perhaps you have even forgotten what day it was?
Solness.

What day——?

Hilda.

Yes, on what day did you hang the wreath on the tower? Well? Tell me at once!

Solness.

H'm—I confess I have forgotten the particular day. I only know it was ten years ago. Some time in the autumn.

Hilda.

[Nods her head slowly several times.] It was ten years ago—on the 19th of September.

Solness.

Yes, it must have been about that time. Fancy your remembering that too! [Stops.] But wait a moment——! Yes—it's the 19th of September to-day.

Hilda.

Yes, it is; and the ten years are gone. And you didn't come—as you had promised me.

Solness.

Promised you? Threatened, I suppose you mean?

Hilda.

I don't think there was any sort of threat in t h a t.

Solness.

Well then, a little bit of fun.
HILDA.

Was that all you wanted? To make fun of me?

SOLONNESS.

Well, or to have a little joke with you. Upon my soul, I don't recollect. But it must have been something of that kind; for you were a mere child then.

HILDA.

Oh, perhaps I wasn't quite such a child either. Not such a mere chit as you imagine.

SOLONNESS.

[Looks searchingly at her.] Did you really and seriously expect me to come again?

HILDA.

[Conceals a half-teasing smile.] Yes, indeed! I did expect that of you.

SOLONNESS.

That I should come back to your home, and take you away with me?

HILDA.

Just like a troll—yes.

SOLONNESS.

And make a princess of you?

HILDA.

That's what you promised.
And give you a kingdom as well?

Hilda.

[Looks up at the ceiling.] Why not? Of course it need not have been an actual, every-day sort of a kingdom.

But something else just as good?

Yes, at least as good. [Looks at him a moment.] I thought, if you could build the highest church-towers in the world, you could surely manage to raise a kingdom of one sort or another as well.

[Shakes his head.] I can’t quite make you out, Miss Wangel.

Can you not? To me it seems all so simple.

No, I can’t make up my mind whether you mean all you say, or are simply having a joke with me.

[Smiles.] Making fun of you, perhaps? I, too?
Solness.

Yes, exactly. Making fun—of both of us. [Looks at her.] Is it long since you found out that I was married?

Hilda.

I have known it all along. Why do you ask me that?

Solness.

[Lightly.] Oh, well, it just occurred to me. [Looks earnestly at her, and says in a low voice.] What have you come for?

Hilda.

I want my kingdom. The time is up.

Solness.

[Laughs involuntarily.] What a girl you are!

Hilda.

[Gaily.] Out with my kingdom, Mr. Solness! [Raps with her fingers.] The kingdom on the table!

Solness.

[Pushing the rocking-chair nearer and sitting down.] Now, seriously speaking—what have you come for? What do you really want to do here?

Hilda.

Oh, first of all, I want to go round and look at all the things that you have built.
Solness.

That will give you plenty of exercise.

Hilda.

Yes, I know you have built a tremendous lot.

Solness.

I have indeed—especially of late years.

Hilda.

Many church-towers among the rest? Immensely high ones?

Solness.

No. I build no more church-towers now. Nor churches either.

Hilda.

What do you build then?

Solness.

Homes for human beings.

Hilda.

[Reflectively.] Couldn’t you build a little—a little bit of a church-tower over these homes as well?

Solness.

[Starting.] What do you mean by that?
HILDA.

I mean—something that points—points up into the free air. With the vane at a dizzy height.

SOLNESS.

[Pondering a little.] Strange that you should say that—for that is just what I am most anxious to do.

HILDA.

[Impatiently.] Why don't you do it, then?

SOLNESS.

[Shakes his head.] No, the people will not have it.

HILDA.

Fancy their not wanting it!

SOLNESS.

[More lightly.] But now I am building a new home for myself—just opposite here.

HILDA.

For yourself?

SOLNESS.

Yes. It is almost finished. And on that there is a tower.

HILDA.

A high tower?

SOLNESS.

Yes.
HILDA.

Very high?

SOLNESS.

No doubt people will say it is too high—too high for a dwelling-house.

HILDA.

I'll go out and look at that tower the first thing tomorrow morning.

SOLNESS.

[Sits resting his cheek on his hand, and gazes at her.] Tell me, Miss Wangel—what is your name? Your Christian name, I mean?

HILDA.

Why, Hilda, of course.

SOLNESS.

[As before.] Hilda? Indeed?

HILDA.

Don't you remember that? You called me Hilda yourself—that day when you misbehaved.

SOLNESS.

Did I really?

HILDA.

But then you said "little Hilda"; and I didn't like that.
SOLNESS.

Oh, you didn’t like that, Miss Hilda?

HILDA.

No, not at such a time as that. But—“Princess Hilda”—that will sound very well, I think.

SOLNESS.

Very well indeed. Princess Hilda of—of—what was to be the name of the kingdom?

HILDA.

Pooh! I won’t have anything to do with that stupid kingdom. I have set my heart upon quite a different one!

SOLNESS.

[Has leaned back in the chair, still gazing at her.] Isn’t it strange—-? The more I think of it now, the more it seems to me as though I had gone about all these years torturing myself with—h’m——

HILDA.

With what?

SOLNESS.

With the effort to recover something—some experience, which I seemed to have forgotten. But I never had the least inkling of what it could be.

HILDA.

You should have tied a knot in your pocket-handkerchief, Mr. Solness.
Solness.

In that case, I should simply have had to go racking my brains to discover what the knot could mean.

Hilda.

Oh yes, I suppose there are trolls of that kind in the world, too.

Solness.

[Rises slowly.] What a good thing it is that you have come to me now.

Hilda.

[Looks deeply into his eyes.] Is it a good thing!

Solness.

For I have been so lonely here. I have been gazing so helplessly at it all. [In a lower voice.] I must tell you—I have begun to be so afraid—so terribly afraid of the younger generation.

Hilda.

[With a little snort of contempt.] Pooh—is the younger generation a thing to be afraid of?

Solness.

It is indeed. And that is why I have locked and barred myself in. [Mysteriously.] I tell you the younger generation will one day come and thunder at my door! They will break in upon me!

Hilda.

Then I should say you ought to go out and open the door to the younger generation.
Open the door?

HILDA.

Yes. Let them come in to you on friendly terms, as it were.

SOLNESS.

No, no, no! The younger generation—it means retribution, you see. It comes, as if under a new banner, heralding the turn of fortune.

HILDA.

[Rises, looks at him, and says with a quivering twitch of her lips.] Can I be of any use to you, Mr. Solness?

SOLNESS.

Yes, you can indeed! For you, too, come—under a new banner, it seems to me. Youth marshalled against youth—!

DR. HERDAL comes in by the hall-door.

DR. HERDAL.

What—you and Miss Wangel here still?

SOLNESS.

Yes. We have had no end of things to talk about.

HILDA.

Both old and new.

DR. HERDAL.

Have you really?
HILDA.

Oh, it has been the greatest fun. For Mr. Solness—he has such a miraculous memory. All the least little details he remembers instantly.

MRS. SOLNESS enters by the door on the right.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Well, Miss Wangel, your room is quite ready for you now.

HILDA.

Oh, how kind you are to me!

SOLNESS.

[to MRS. SOLNESS.] The nursery?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, the middle one. But first let us go in to supper.

SOLNESS.

[Nods to HILDA.] Hilda shall sleep in the nursery, she shall.

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Looks at him.] Hilda?

SOLNESS.

Yes, Miss Wangel's name is Hilda. I knew her when she was a child.
Mrs. Solness.

Did you really, Halvard? Well, shall we go? Supper is on the table.

[She takes Dr. Herdal's arm and goes out with him to the right. Hilda has meanwhile been collecting her travelling things.

Hilda.

[Softly and rapidly to Solness.] Is it true, what you said? Can I be of use to you?

Solness.

[Takes the things from her.] You are the very being I have needed most.

Hilda.

[Looks at him with happy, wondering eyes and clasps her hands.] But then, great heavens——!

Solness.

[Eagerly.] What——?

Hilda.

Then I have my kingdom!

Solness.

[Involuntarily.] Hilda——!

Hilda.

[Again with the quivering twitch of her lips.] Almost—I was going to say.

[She goes out to the right, Solness follows her.]
ACT SECOND

A prettily furnished small drawing-room in Solness's house. In the back, a glass-door leading out to the veranda and garden. The right-hand corner is cut off transversely by a large bay-window, in which are flower-stands. The left-hand corner is similarly cut off by a transverse wall, in which is a small door papered like the wall. On each side, an ordinary door. In front, on the right, a console table with a large mirror over it. Well-filled stands of plants and flowers. In front, on the left, a sofa with a table and chairs. Further back, a bookcase. Well forward in the room, before the bay-window, a small table and some chairs. It is early in the day.

Solness sits by the little table with Ragnar Brovik's portfolio open in front of him. He is turning the drawings over and closely examining some of them. Mrs. Solness moves about noiselessly with a small watering-pot, attending to her flowers. She is dressed in black as before. Her hat, cloak and parasol lie on a chair near the mirror. Unobserved by her, Solness now and again follows her with his eyes. Neither of them speaks.

Solness.

[Turns his head, and says in an off-hand tone of indifference.] Well, is that you?
Kaia.

I merely wished to let you know that I have come.

Solness.

Yes, yes, that's all right. Hasn't Ragnar come too?

Kaia.

No, not yet. He had to wait a little while to see the doctor. But he is coming presently to hear——

Solness.

How is the old man to-day?

Kaia.

Not well. He begs you to excuse him; he is obliged to keep his bed to-day.

Solness.

Why, of course; by all means let him rest. But now, get to your work.

Kaia.

Yes. [Pauses at the door] Do you wish to speak to Ragnar when he comes?

Solness.

No—I don't know that I have anything particular to say to him.

[Kaia goes out again to the left. Solness remains seated, turning over the drawings.]
Mrs. Solness.

[Over beside the plants.] I wonder if he isn’t going to die now, as well?

Solness.

[Looks up at her.] As well as who?

Mrs. Solness.

[Without answering.] Yes, yes—depend upon it, Halvard, old Brovik is going to die too. You’ll see that he will.

Solness.

My dear Aline, ought you not to go out for a little walk?

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, I suppose I ought to.

[She continues to attend to the flowers.

Solness.

[Bending over the drawings.] Is she still asleep?

Mrs. Solness.

[Looking at him.] Is it Miss Wangel you are sitting there thinking about?

Solness.

[Indifferently.] I just happened to recollect her.

Mrs. Solness.

Miss Wangel was up long ago.
Solness.

Oh, was she?

Mrs. Solness.

When I went in to see her, she was busy putting her things in order.

[She goes in front of the mirror and slowly begins to put on her hat.

Solness.

[After a short pause.] So we have found a use for one of our nurseries after all, Aline.

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, we have.

Solness.

That seems to me better than to have them all standing empty.

Mrs. Solness.

That emptiness is dreadful; you are right there.

Solness.

[Closes the portfolio, rises and approaches her.] You will find that we shall get on far better after this, Aline. Things will be more comfortable. Life will be easier—especially for you.

Mrs. Solness.

[Looks at him.] After this?

Solness.

Yes, believe me, Aline—
Mrs. Solness.

Do you mean—because she has come here?

Solness.

[Checking himself.] I mean, of course—when once we have moved into the new house.

Mrs. Solness.

[Takes her cloak.] Ah, do you think so, Halvard? Will it be better then?

Solness.

I can't think otherwise. And surely you think so too?

Mrs. Solness.

I think nothing at all about the new house.

Solness.

[Cast down.] It's hard for me to hear you say that; for you know it is mainly for your sake that I have built it.

[He offers to help her on with her cloak.

Mrs. Solness.

[Evades him.] The fact is, you do far too much for my sake.

Solness.

[With a certain vehemence.] No, no, you really mustn't say that, Aline! I cannot bear to hear you say such things!
Mrs. Solness.

Very well, then I won't say it, Halvard.

Solness.

But I stick to what I said. You'll see that things will be easier for you in the new place.

Mrs. Solness.

Oh Heavens—easier for me—!

Solness.

[Eagerly.] Yes, indeed they will! You may be quite sure of that! For you see—there will be so very, very much there that will remind you of your own home——

Mrs. Solness.

The home that used to be father's and mother's—and that was burnt to the ground——

Solness.

[In a low voice.] Yes, yes, my poor Aline. That was a terrible blow for you.

Mrs. Solness.

[Breaking out in lamentation.] You may build as much as ever you like, Halvard—you can never build up again a real home for me!

Solness.

[Crosses the room.] Well, in Heaven's name, let us talk no more about it then.
Mrs. Solness.

We are not in the habit of talking about it. For you always put the thought away from you——

Solness.

[Stops suddenly and looks at her.] Do I? And why should I do that? Put the thought away from me?

Mrs. Solness.

Oh yes, Halvard, I understand you very well. You are so anxious to spare me—and to find excuses for me too—as much as ever you can.

Solness.

[With astonishment in his eyes.] You! Is it you—yourself, that you are talking about, Aline?

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, who else should it be but myself?

Solness.

[Involuntarily to himself.] That too!

Mrs. Solness.

As for the old house, I wouldn’t mind so much about that. When once misfortune was in the air—why——

Solness.

Ah, you are right there. Misfortune will have its way—as the saying goes.
Mrs. Solness.

But it's what came of the fire—the dreadful thing that followed—! That is the thing! That, that, that!

Solness.

[Veheemntly.] Don't think about that, Aline!

Mrs. Solness.

Ah, that is exactly what I cannot help thinking about. And now, at last, I must speak about it, too; for I don't seem able to bear it any longer. And then never to be able to forgive myself—

Solness.

[Exclaiming.] Yourself—!

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, for I had duties on both sides—both towards you and towards the little ones. I ought to have hardened myself—not to have let the horror take such hold upon me—nor the grief for the burning of my home. [Wrings her hands.] Oh, Halvard, if I had only had the strength!

Solness.

[Softly, much moved, comes closer.] Aline—you must promise me never to think these thoughts any more.—Promise me that, dear!

Mrs. Solness.

Oh, promise, promise! One can promise anything.
[Clenches his hands and crosses the room.] Oh, but this is hopeless, hopeless! Never a ray of sunlight! Not so much as a gleam of brightness to light up our home!

Mrs. Solness.

This is no home, Halvard.

Solness.

Oh no, you may well say that. [Gloomily.] And God knows whether you are not right in saying that it will be no better for us in the new house, either.

Mrs. Solness.

It will never be any better. Just as empty—just as desolate—there as here.

Solness.

[Veheemntly.] Why in all the world have we built it then? Can you tell me that?

Mrs. Solness.

No; you must answer that question for yourself.

Solness.

[Glances suspiciously at her.] What do you mean by that, Aline?

Mrs. Solness.

What do I mean?
Solness.

Yes, in the devil's name! You said it so strangely—as if you had some hidden meaning in it.

Mrs. Solness.

No, indeed, I assure you—

Solness.

[Comes closer.] Oh, come now—I know what I know. I have both my eyes and my ears about me, Aline—you may depend upon that!

Mrs. Solness.

Why, what are you talking about? What is it?

Solness.

[Places himself in front of her.] Do you mean to say you don't find a kind of lurking, hidden meaning in the most innocent word I happen to say?

Mrs. Solness.

I, do you say? I do that?

Solness.

[Laughs.] Ho-ho-ho! It's natural enough, Aline! When you have a sick man on your hands——

Mrs. Solness.

[Anxiously.] Sick? Are you ill, Halvard?
Solness.

[Violently.] A half-mad man then! A crazy man! Call me what you will.

Mrs. Solness.

[Feels blindly for a chair and sits down.] Halvard—for God's sake——

Solness.

But you are wrong, both you and the doctor. I am not in the state you imagine.

[He walks up and down the room. Mrs. Solness follows him anxiously with her eyes. Finally he goes up to her.

Solness.

[Calmly.] In reality there is nothing whatever the matter with me.

Mrs. Solness.

No, there isn't, is there? But then what is it that troubles you so?

Solness.

Why this, that I often feel ready to sink under this terrible burden of debt——

Mrs. Solness.

Debt, do you say? But you owe no one anything, Halvard!

Solness.

[Softly, with emotion.] I owe a boundless debt to you—to you—to you, Aline.
Mrs. Solness.

[Rises slowly.] What is behind all this? You may just as well tell me at once.

Solness.

But there is nothing behind it! I have never done you any wrong—not wittingly and wilfully, at any rate. And yet—and yet it seems as though a crushing debt rested upon me and weighed me down.

Mrs. Solness.

A debt to me?

Solness.

Chiefly to you.

Mrs. Solness.

Then you are—ill after all, Halvard.

Solness.

[Gloomily.] I suppose I must be—or not far from it.

[Looks towards the door to the right, which is opened at this moment.] Ah! now it grows lighter.

Hilda Wangel comes in. She has made some alteration in her dress, and let down her skirt.

Hilda.

Good morning, Mr. Solness!

Solness.

[Nods.] Slept well?
HILDA.

Quite deliciously! Like a child in a cradle. Oh—I lay and stretched myself like—like a princess!

SOLNESS.

[Smiles a little.] You were thoroughly comfortable then?

HILDA.

I should think so.

SOLNESS.

And no doubt you dreamed, too.

HILDA.

Yes, I did. But that was horrid.

SOLNESS.

Was it?

HILDA.

Yes, for I dreamed I was falling over a frightfully high, sheer precipice. Do you never have that kind of dream?

SOLNESS.

Oh yes—now and then——

HILDA.

It’s tremendously thrilling—when you fall and fall——

SOLNESS.

It seems to make one’s blood run cold.
HILDA.

Do you draw your legs up under you while you are falling?

SOLNESS.

Yes, as high as ever I can.

HILDA.

So do I.

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Takes her parasol.] I must go into town now, Halvard. [To HILDA.] And I'll try to get one or two things that you may require.

HILDA.

[Making a motion to throw her arms round her neck.] Oh, you dear, sweet Mrs. Solness! You are really much too kind to me! Frightfully kind——

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Deprecatingly, freeing herself.] Oh, not at all. It's only my duty, so I am very glad to do it.

HILDA.

[Offended, pouts.] But really, I think I am quite fit to be seen in the streets—now that I've put my dress to rights. Or do you think I am not?

MRS. SOLNESS.

To tell you the truth, I think people would stare at you a little.
HILDA.

[Contemptuously.] Pooh! Is that all? That only amuses me.

SOLNESS.

[With suppressed ill-humour.] Yes, but people might take it into their heads that you were mad too, you see.

HILDA.

Mad? Are there so many mad people here in town, then?

SOLNESS.

[Points to his own forehead.] Here you see one at all events.

HILDA.

You—Mr. Solness!

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh, don't talk like that, my dear Halvard!

SOLNESS.

Have you not noticed that yet?

HILDA.

No, I certainly have not. [Reflects and laughs a little.] And yet—perhaps in one single thing.

SOLNESS.

Ah, do you hear that, Aline?
MRS. SOLNESS.

What is that one single thing, Miss Wangel?

HILDA.

No, I won't say.

SOLNESS.

Oh yes, do!

HILDA.

No thank you—I am not so mad as that.

MRS. SOLNESS.

When you and Miss Wangel are alone, I daresay she will tell you, Halvard.

SOLNESS.

Ah—you think she will?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh yes, certainly. For you have known her so well in the past. Ever since she was a child—you tell me. [She goes out by the door on the left.]

HILDA.

[After a little while.] Does your wife dislike me very much?

SOLNESS.

Did you think you noticed anything of the kind?

HILDA.

Did you not notice it yourself?
SOLNESS.

[Evasively.] Aline has become exceedingly shy with strangers of late years.

HILDA.

Has she really?

SOLNESS.

But if only you could get to know her thoroughly—! Ah, she is so good—so kind—so excellent a creature—

HILDA.

[Impatiently.] But if she is all that—what made her say that about her duty?

SOLNESS.

Her duty?

HILDA.

She said that she would go out and buy something for me, because it was her duty. Oh I can't bear that ugly, horrid word!

SOLNESS.

Why not?

HILDA.

It sounds so cold, and sharp, and stinging. Duty—duty—duty. Don't you think so, too? Doesn't it seem to sting you?

SOLNESS.

H'm—haven't thought much about it.
HILDA.

Yes, it does. And if she is so good—as you say she is—why should she talk in that way?

SOLNESS.

But, good Lord, what would you have had her say, then?

HILDA.

She might have said she would do it because she had taken a tremendous fancy to me. She might have said something like that—something really warm and cordial, you understand.

SOLNESS.

[Looks at her.] Is that how you would like to have it?

HILDA.

Yes, precisely. [She wanders about the room, stops at the bookcase and looks at the books.] What a lot of books you have.

SOLNESS.

Yes, I have got together a good many.

HILDA.

Do you read them all, too?

SOLNESS.

I used to try to. Do you read much?
HILDA.

No, never! I have given it up. For it all seems so irrelevant.

SOLNESS.

That is just my feeling.

[HILDA wanders about a little, stops at the small table, opens the portfolio and turns over the contents.

HILDA.

Are all these drawings yours?

SOLNESS.

No, they are drawn by a young man whom I employ to help me.

HILDA.

Some one you have taught?

SOLNESS.

Oh yes, no doubt— he has learnt something from me, too.

HILDA.

[Sits down.] Then I suppose he is very clever. [Looks at a drawing.] Isn't he?

SOLNESS.

Oh, he might be worse. For my purpose—

HILDA.

Oh yes—I'm sure he is frightfully clever.
Solness.

Do you think you can see that in the drawings?

Hilda.

Pooh—these scrawlings! But if he has been learning from you—

Solness.

Oh, so far as that goes—there are plenty of people here that have learnt from me, and have come to little enough for all that.

Hilda.

[Looks at him and shakes her head.] No, I can’t for the life of me understand how you can be so stupid.

Solness.

Stupid? Do you think I am so very stupid?

Hilda.

Yes, I do indeed. If you are content to go about here teaching all these people—

Solness.

[With a slight start.] Well, and why not?

Hilda.

[Rises, half serious, half laughing.] No indeed, Mr. Solness! What can be the good of that? No one but you should be allowed to build. You should stand quite alone—do it all yourself. Now you know it.
SOLNESS.

[Involuntarily.] Hilda——!

HILDA.

Well!

SOLNESS.

How in the world did that come into your head?

HILDA.

Do you think I am so very far wrong then?

SOLNESS.

No, that's not what I mean. But now I'll tell you something.

HILDA.

Well?

SOLNESS.

I keep on—incessantly—in silence and alone—brooding on that very thought.

HILDA.

Yes, that seems to me perfectly natural.

SOLNESS.

[Looks somewhat searchingly at her.] Perhaps you have noticed it already?

HILDA.

No, indeed I haven't.
SOLNESS.

But just now—when you said you thought I was—off my balance? In one thing, you said——

HILDA.

Oh, I was thinking of something quite different.

SOLNESS.

What was it?

HILDA.

I am not going to tell you.

SOLNESS.

[Crosses the room.] Well, well—as you please. [Stops at the bow-window.] Come here, and I will show you something.

HILDA.

[Approaching.] What is it?

SOLNESS.

Do you see—over there in the garden——?

HILDA.

Yes?

SOLNESS.

[Points.] Right above the great quarry——?

HILDA.

That new house, you mean?
SOLNESS.
The one that is being built, yes. Almost finished.

HILDA.
It seems to have a very high tower.

SOLNESS.
The scaffolding is still up.

HILDA.
Is that your new house?

SOLNESS.
Yes.

HILDA.
The house you are soon going to move into?

SOLNESS.
Yes.

HILDA.
[Looks at him.] Are there nurseries in that house, too?

SOLNESS.
Three, as there are here.

HILDA.
And no child.

SOLNESS.
And there never will be one.
HILDA.

[With a half-smile.] Well, isn't it just as I said——?

SOLNESS.

That——?

HILDA.

That you are a little—a little mad after all.

SOLNESS.

Was that what you were thinking of?

HILDA.

Yes, of all the empty nurseries I slept in.

SOLNESS.

[Lower his voice.] We have had children—Aline and I.

HILDA.

[Looks eagerly at him.] Have you——?

SOLNESS.

Two little boys. They were of the same age.

HILDA.

Twins, then.

SOLNESS.

Yes, twins. It's eleven or twelve years ago now.
HILDA.

[Cautiously.] And so both of them——? You have lost both the twins, then?

SOLNESS.

[With quiet emotion.] We kept them only about three weeks. Or scarcely so much. [Bursts forth.] Oh, Hilda, I can’t tell you what a good thing it is for me that you have come! For now at last I have some one I can talk to!

HILDA.

Can you not talk to—her, too?

SOLNESS.

Not about this. Not as I want to talk and must talk. [Gloomily.] And not about so many other things, either.

HILDA.

[In a subdued voice.] Was that all you meant when you said you needed me?

SOLNESS.

That was mainly what I meant—at all events, yesterday. For to-day I am not so sure—[Breaking off.] Come here and let us sit down, Hilda. Sit there on the sofa—so that you can look into the garden. [HILDA seats herself in the corner of the sofa. SOLNESS brings a chair closer.] Should you like to hear about it?

HILDA.

Yes, I shall love to sit and listen to you.
Solness.

[Sits down.] Then I will tell you all about it.

Hilda.

Now I can see both the garden and you, Mr. Solness. So now, tell away! Begin!

Solness.

[Points towards the bow-window.] Out there on the rising ground—where you see the new house——

Hilda.

Yes?

Solness.

Aline and I lived there in the first years of our married life. There was an old house up there that had belonged to her mother; and we inherited it, and the whole of the great garden with it.

Hilda.

Was there a tower on that house, too?

Solness.

No, nothing of the kind. From the outside it looked like a great, dark, ugly wooden box; but all the same, it was snug and comfortable enough inside.

Hilda.

Then did you pull down the ramshackle old place?

Solness.

No, it was burnt down.
HILDA.
The whole of it?

SOLNESS.
Yes.

HILDA.
Was that a great misfortune for you?

SOLNESS.
That depends on how you look at it. As a builder, the fire was the making of me——

HILDA.
Well, but——?

SOLNESS.
It was just after the birth of the two little boys——

HILDA.
The poor little twins, yes.

SOLNESS.
They came healthy and bonny into the world. And they were growing too—you could see the difference from day to day.

HILDA.
Little children do grow quickly at first.

SOLNESS.
It was the prettiest sight in the world to see Aline lying with the two of them in her arms.—But then came the night of the fire——
HILDA.

[Excitedly.] What happened? Do tell me! Was any one burnt?

SOLNESS.

No, not that. Every one got safe and sound out of the house——

HILDA.

Well, and what then——?

SOLNESS.

The fright had shaken Aline terribly. The alarm—the escape—the break-neck hurry—and then the ice-cold night air—for they had to be carried out just as they lay—both she and the little ones.

HILDA.

Was it too much for them?

SOLNESS.

Oh no, they stood it well enough. But Aline fell into a fever, and it affected her milk. She would insist on nursing them herself; because it was her duty, she said. And both our little boys, they——[Clenching his hands. ]—they—oh!

HILDA.

They did not get over that?

SOLNESS.

No, that they did not get over. That was how we lost them.
HILDA.

It must have been terribly hard for you.

SOLNESS.

Hard enough for me: but ten times harder for Aline. [Clenching his hands in suppressed fury.] Oh, that such things should be allowed to happen here in the world! [Shortly and firmly.] From the day I lost them, I had no heart for building churches.

HILDA.

Did you not like building the church-tower in our town?

SOLNESS.

I didn’t like it. I know how free and happy I felt when that tower was finished.

HILDA.

I know that, too.

SOLNESS.

And now I shall never—never build anything of that sort again! Neither churches nor church-towers.

HILDA.

[Nods slowly.] Nothing but houses for people to live in.

SOLNESS.

Homes for human beings, Hilda.
HILDA.

But homes with high towers and pinnacles upon them.

SOLNESS.

If possible. [Adopts a lighter tone.] But, as I said before, that fire was the making of me—as a builder, I mean.

HILDA.

Why don't you call yourself an architect, like the others?

SOLNESS.

I have not been systematically enough taught for that. Most of what I know I have found out for myself.

HILDA.

But you succeeded all the same.

SOLNESS.

Yes, thanks to the fire. I laid out almost the whole of the garden in villa lots; and there I was able to build after my own heart. So I came to the front with a rush.

HILDA.

[Looks keenly at him.] You must surely be a very happy man, as matters stand with you.

SOLNESS.

[Gloomily.] Happy? Do you say that, too—like all the rest of them?
HILDA.

Yes, I should say you must be. If you could only cease thinking about the two little children——

SOLNESS.

[Slowly.] The two little children—they are not so easy to forget, Hilda.

HILDA.

[Somewhat uncertainly.] Do you still feel their loss so much—after all these years?

SOLNESS.

[Looks fixedly at her, without replying.] A happy man you said——

HILDA.

Well, now, are you not happy—in other respects?

SOLNESS.

[Continues to look at her.] When I told you all this about the fire—h'm——

HILDA.

Well?

SOLNESS.

Was there not one special thought that you—that you seized upon?

HILDA.

[Reflects in vain.] No. What thought should that be?
Solness.

[With subdued emphasis.] It was simply and solely by that fire that I was enabled to build homes for human beings. Cosy, comfortable, bright homes, where father and mother and the whole troop of children can live in safety and gladness, feeling what a happy thing it is to be alive in the world—and most of all to belong to each other—in great things and in small.

Hilda.

[Ardently.] Well, and is it not a great happiness for you to be able to build such beautiful homes?

Solness.

The price, Hilda! The terrible price I had to pay for the opportunity!

Hilda.

But can you never get over that?

Solness.

No. That I might build homes for others, I had to forego—to forego for all time—the home that might have been my own. I mean a home for a troop of children—and for father and mother, too.

Hilda.

[Cautiously.] But need you have done that? For all time, you say?

Solness.

[Nods slowly.] That was the price of this happiness that people talk about. [Breathes heavily.] This happiness—h'm—this happiness was not to be bought any cheaper, Hilda.

HILDA.

[As before.] But may it not come right even yet?

SOLNESS.

Never in this world—never. That is another consequence of the fire—and of Aline's illness afterwards.

HILDA.

[Looks at him with an indefinable expression.] And yet you build all these nurseries?

SOLNESS.

[Seriously.] Have you never noticed, Hilda, how the impossible—how it seems to beckon and cry aloud to one?

HILDA.

[Reflecting.] The impossible? [With animation.] Yes, indeed! Is that how you feel too?

SOLNESS.

Yes, I do.

HILDA.

Then there must be—a little of the troll in you too.

SOLNESS.

Why of the troll?

HILDA.

What would you call it, then?
SOLNESS.

[Rises.] Well, well, perhaps you are right. [Vehemently.] But how can I help turning into a troll, when this is how it always goes with me in everything—in everything!

HILDA.

How do you mean?

SOLNESS.

[Speaking low, with inward emotion.] Mark what I say to you, Hilda. All that I have succeeded in doing, building, creating—all the beauty, security, cheerful comfort—ay, and magnificence too—[Clenches his hands.]
Oh, is it not terrible even to think of——!

HILDA.

What is so terrible?

SOLNESS.

That all this I have to make up for, to pay for—not in money, but in human happiness. And not with my own happiness only, but with other people’s too. Yes, yes, do you see that, Hilda? That is the price which my position as an artist has cost me—and others. And every single day I have to look on while the price is paid for me anew. Over again, and over again—and over again for ever!

HILDA.

[Rises and looks steadily at him.] Now I can see that you are thinking of—of her.
Solness.

Yes, mainly of Aline. For Aline—she, too, had her vocation in life, just as much as I had mine. [His voice quivers.] But her vocation has had to be stunted, and crushed, and shattered—in order that mine might force its way to—to a sort of great victory. For you must know that Aline—she, too, had a talent for building.

Hilda.

She! For building?

Solness.

[Shakes his head.] Not houses and towers, and spires—not such things as I work away at——

Hilda.

Well, but what then?

Solness.

[Softly, with emotion.] For building up the souls of little children, Hilda. For building up children's souls in perfect balance, and in noble and beautiful forms. For enabling them to soar up into erect and full-grown human souls. That was Aline's talent. And there it all lies now—unused and unusable for ever—of no earthly service to any one—just like the ruins left by a fire.

Hilda.

Yes, but even if this were so——?

Solness.

It is so! It is so! I know it!
HILDA.

Well, but in any case it is not your fault.

SOLNESS.

[Fixes his eyes on her, and nods slowly.] Ah, that is the great, the terrible question. That is the doubt that is gnawing me—night and day.

HILDA.

That?

SOLNESS.

Yes. Suppose the fault was mine—in a certain sense.

HILDA.

Your fault! The fire!

SOLNESS.

All of it; the whole thing. And yet, perhaps—I may not have had anything to do with it.

HILDA.

[Looks at him with a troubled expression.] Oh, Mr. Solness—if you can talk like that, I am afraid you must be—ill, after all.

SOLNESS.

H’m—I don’t think I shall ever be of quite sound mind on that point.

RAGNAR BROVIK cautiously opens the little door in the left hand corner. HILDA comes forward.
Ragnar.

[When he sees Hilda.] Oh. I beg pardon, Mr. Solness— [He makes a movement to withdraw.

Solness.

No, no, don’t go. Let us get it over.

Ragnar.

Oh, yes—if only we could.

Solness.

I hear your father is no better?

Ragnar.

Father is fast growing weaker—and therefore I beg and implore you to write a few kind words for me on one of the plans! Something for father to read before he—

Solness.

[Vehemently.] I won’t hear anything more about those drawings of yours!

Ragnar.

Have you looked at them?

Solness.

Yes—I have.

Ragnar.

And they are good for nothing? And I am good for nothing, too?
[Evasively.] Stay here with me, Ragnar. You shall have everything your own way. And then you can marry Kaia, and live at your ease—and happily too, who knows? Only don’t think of building on your own account.

Ragnar.

Well, well, then I must go home and tell father what you say—I promised I would.—Is this what I am to tell father—before he dies?

Solness.

[With a groan.] Oh tell him—tell him what you will, for me. Best to say nothing at all to him! [With a sudden outburst.] I cannot do anything else, Ragnar!

Ragnar.

May I have the drawings to take with me?

Solness.

Yes, take them—take them by all means! They are lying there on the table.

Ragnar.

[Goes to the table.] Thanks.

Hilda.

[Puts her hand on the portfolio.] No, no; leave them here.

Solness.

Why?
HILDA.

Because I want to look at them, too.

SOLNESS.

But you have been— [To RAGNAR.] Well, leave them here, then.

RAGNAR.

Very well.

SOLNESS.

And go home at once to your father.

RAGNAR.

Yes, I suppose I must.

SOLNESS.

[As if in desperation.] Ragnar—you must not ask me to do what is beyond my power! Do you hear, Ragnar? You must not!

RAGNAR.

No, no. I beg your pardon—

[He bows, and goes out by the corner door. HILDA goes over and sits down on a chair near the mirror.

HILDA.

[Looks angrily at SOLNESS.] That was a very ugly thing to do.

SOLNESS.

Do you think so, too?
HILDA.

Yes, it was horribly ugly—and hard and bad and cruel as well.

SOLNESS.

Oh, you don't understand my position.

HILDA.

No matter—. I say you ought not to be like that.

SOLNESS.

You said yourself, only just now, that no one but I ought to be allowed to build.

HILDA.

I may say such things—but you must not.

SOLNESS.

I most of all, surely, who have paid so dear for my position.

HILDA.

Oh yes—with what you call domestic comfort—and that sort of thing.

SOLNESS.

And with my peace of soul into the bargain.

HILDA.

[Rising.] Peace of soul! [With feeling.] Yes, yes, you are right in that! Poor Mr. Solness—you fancy that——
Solness.

[With a quiet, chuckling laugh.] Just sit down again, Hilda, and I'll tell you something funny.

Hilda.

[Sits down; with intent interest.] Well?

Solness.

It sounds such a ludicrous little thing; for, you see, the whole story turns upon nothing but a crack in a chimney.

Hilda.

No more than that?

Solness.

No, not to begin with.

[He moves a chair nearer to Hilda and sits down.

Hilda.

[Impatiently, taps on her knee.] Well, now for the crack in the chimney!

Solness.

I had noticed the split in the flue long, long before the fire. Every time I went up into the attic, I looked to see if it was still there.

Hilda.

And it was?

Solness.

Yes; for no one else knew about it.
HILDA.

And you said nothing?

SOLNESS.

Nothing.

HILDA.

And did not think of repairing the flue either?

SOLNESS.

Oh yes, I thought about it—but never got any further. Every time I intended to set to work, it seemed just as if a hand held me back. Not to-day, I thought—tomorrow; and nothing ever came of it.

HILDA.

But why did you keep putting it off like that?

SOLNESS.

Because I was revolving something in my mind. [Slowly, and in a low voice.] Through that little black crack in the chimney, I might, perhaps, force my way upwards—as a builder.

HILDA.

[Looking straight in front of her.] That must have been thrilling.

SOLNESS.

Almost irresistible—quite irresistible. For at that time it appeared to me a perfectly simple and straightforward matter. I would have had it happen in the winter-time—a little before midday. I was to be out driving Aline in the sleigh. The servants at home would have made huge fires in the stoves.

HILDA.

For, of course, it was to be bitterly cold that day?

SOLNESS.

Rather biting, yes—and they would want Aline to find it thoroughly snug and warm when she came home.

HILDA.

I suppose she is very chilly by nature?

SOLNESS.

She is. And as we drove home, we were to see the smoke.

HILDA.

Only the smoke?

SOLNESS.

The smoke first. But when we came up to the garden gate, the whole of the old timber-box was to be a rolling mass of flames.—That is how I wanted it to be, you see.

HILDA.

Oh why, why could it not have happened so!

SOLNESS.

You may well say that, Hilda.
HILDA.

Well, but now listen, Mr. Solness. Are you perfectly certain that the fire was caused by that little crack in the chimney!

SOLNESS.

No, on the contrary—I am perfectly certain that the crack in the chimney had nothing whatever to do with the fire.

HILDA.

What!

SOLNESS.

It has been clearly ascertained that the fire broke out in a clothes-cupboard—in a totally different part of the house.

HILDA.

Then what is all this nonsense you are talking about the crack in the chimney!

SOLNESS.

May I go on talking to you a little, Hilda?

HILDA.

Yes, if you'll only talk sensibly——

SOLNESS.

I will try to. [He moves his chair nearer.]

HILDA.

Out with it, then, Mr. Solness.
SOLNESS.

[Confidentially.] Don’t you agree with me, Hilda, that there exist special, chosen people who have been endowed with the power and faculty of desiring a thing, craving for a thing, willing a thing—so persistently and so—so inexorably—that at last it has to happen? Don’t you believe that?

HILDA.

[With an indefinable expression in her eyes.] If that is so, we shall see, one of these days, whether I am one of the chosen.

SOLNESS.

It is not one’s self alone that can do such great things. Oh, no—the helpers and the servers—they must do their part too, if it is to be of any good. But they never come of themselves. One has to call upon them very persistently—inwardly, you understand.

HILDA.

What are these helpers and servers?

SOLNESS.

Oh, we can talk about that some other time. For the present, let us keep to this business of the fire.

HILDA.

Don’t you think that fire would have happened all the same—even without your wishing for it?
If the house had been old Knut Brøvik's it would never have burnt down so conveniently for him. I am sure of that; for he does not know how to call for the helpers—no, nor for the servers, either. [Rises in unrest.] So you see, Hilda—it is my fault, after all, that the lives of the two little boys had to be sacrificed. And do you think it is not my fault, too, that Aline has never been the woman she should and might have been—and that she most longed to be?

Yes, but if it is all the work of those helpers and servers—?

Who called for the helpers and servers? It was I! And they came and obeyed my will. [In increasing excitement.] That is what people call having the luck on your side; but I must tell you what this sort of luck feels like! It feels like a great raw place here on my breast. And the helpers and servers keep on flaying pieces of skin off other people in order to close my sore!—But still the sore is not healed—never, never! Oh, if you knew how it can sometimes gnaw and burn!

[Looks attentively at him.] You are ill, Mr. Solness. Very ill, I almost think.

Say mad; for that is what you mean.
HILDA.

No, I don't think there is much amiss with your intellect.

SOLNESS.

With what then? Out with it!

HILDA.

I wonder whether you were not sent into the world with a sickly conscience.

SOLNESS.

A sickly conscience? What deviltry is that?

HILDA.

I mean that your conscience is feeble—too delicately built, as it were—hasn't strength to take a grip of things—to lift and bear what is heavy.

SOLNESS.

[Growls.] H'm! May I ask, then, what sort of a conscience one ought to have?

HILDA.

I should like your conscience to be—to be thoroughly robust.

SOLNESS.

Indeed? Robust, eh? Is your own conscience robust, may I ask?
Hilda.

Yes, I think it is. I have never noticed that it wasn’t.

Solness.

It has not been put very severely to the test, I should think.

Hilda.

[With a quivering of the lips.] Oh, it was no such simple matter to leave father—I am so awfully fond of him.

Solness.

Dear me! for a month or two—

Hilda.

I think I shall never go home again.

Solness.

Never? Then why did you leave him?

Hilda.

[Half-seriously, half-banteringly.] Have you forgotten again that the ten years are up?

Solness.

Oh nonsense. Was anything wrong at home? Eh?

Hilda.

[Quite seriously.] It was this impulse within me that urged and goaded me to come—and lured and drew me on, as well.
Solness.

[Eagerly.] There we have it! There we have it, Hilda! There is a troll in you too, as in me. For it's the troll in one, you see—it is that that calls to the powers outside us. And then you must give in—whether you will or no.

Hilda.

I almost think you are right, Mr. Solness.

Solness.

[Walks about the room.] Oh, there are devils innumerable abroad in the world, Hilda, that one never sees!

Hilda.

Devils, too?

Solness.

[Stops.] Good devils and bad devils; light-haired devils and black-haired devils. If only you could always tell whether it is the light or dark ones that have got hold of you! [Paces about.] Ho-ho! Then it would be simple enough!

Hilda.

[Follows him with her eyes.] Or if one had a really vigorous, radiantly healthy conscience—so that one dared to do what one would.

Solness.

[Stops beside the console table.] I believe, now, that most people are just as puny creatures as I am in that respect.
HILDA.
I shouldn’t wonder.

SOLNESS.

[Leaning against the table.] In the sagas—. Have you read any of the old sagas?

HILDA.
Oh yes! When I used to read books, I—

SOLNESS.

In the sagas you read about vikings, who sailed to foreign lands, and plundered and burned and killed men—

HILDA.
And carried off women—

SOLNESS.
—-and kept them in captivity—

HILDA.
—-took them home in their ships—

SOLNESS.
—-and behaved to them like—like the very worst of trolls.

HILDA.

[Looks straight before her, with a half-veiled look.] I think that must have been thrilling.
SOLNESS.

[With a short, deep laugh.] To carry off women, eh?

HILDA.

To be carried off.

SOLNESS.

[Looks at her a moment.] Oh, indeed.

HILDA.

[As if breaking the thread of the conversation.] But what made you speak of these vikings, Mr. Solness?

SOLNESS.

Why, those fellows must have had robust consciences, if you like! When they got home again, they could eat and drink, and be as happy as children. And the women, too! They often would not leave them on any account. Can you understand that, Hilda?

HILDA.

Those women I can understand exceedingly well.

SOLNESS.

Oho! Perhaps you could do the same yourself?

HILDA.

Why not?

SOLNESS.

Live—of your own free will—with a ruffian like that?
HILDA.

If it was a ruffian I had come to love——

SOLNESS.

Could you come to love a man like that?

HILDA.

Good heavens, you know very well one can't choose whom one is going to love.

SOLNESS.

[Looks meditatively at her.] Oh no, I suppose it is the troll within one that's responsible for that.

HILDA.

[Half-laughing.] And all those blessèd devils, that you know so well—both the light-haired and the dark-haired ones.

SOLNESS.

[Quietly and warmly.] Then I hope with all my heart that the devils will choose carefully for you, Hilda.

HILDA.

For me they have chosen already—once and for all.

SOLNESS.

[Looks earnestly at her.] Hilda—you are like a wild bird of the woods.
HILDA.

Far from it. I don’t hide myself away under the bushes.

SOLNESS.

No, no. There is rather something of the bird of prey in you.

HILDA.

That is nearer it—perhaps. [Very vehemently.] And why not a bird of prey? Why should not I go a-hunting—I, as well as the rest? Carry off the prey I want—if only I can get my claws into it, and do with it as I will.

SOLNESS.

Hilda—do you know what you are?

HILDA.

Yes, I suppose I am a strange sort of bird.

SOLNESS.

No. You are like a dawning day. When I look at you—I seem to be looking towards the sunrise.

HILDA.

Tell me, Mr. Solness—are you certain that you have never called me to you? Inwardly, you know?

SOLNESS.

[Softly and slowly.] I almost think I must have.
HILDA.
What did you want with me?

SOLNESS.
You are the younger generation, Hilda.

HILDA.
[Smiles.] That younger generation that you are so afraid of?

SOLNESS.
[Nods slowly.] And which, in my heart, I yearn towards so deeply.

[HILDA rises, goes to the little table, and fetches RAGNAR BROVIK'S portfolio.

HILDA.
[Hold out the portfolio to him.] We were talking of these drawings——

SOLNESS.
[Shortly, waving them away.] Put those things away! I have seen enough of them.

HILDA.
Yes, but you have to write your approval on them.

SOLNESS.
Write my approval on them? Never!

HILDA.
But the poor old man is lying at death's door! Can't you give him and his son this pleasure before they are parted? And perhaps he might get the commission to carry them out, too.

Solness.

Yes, that is just what he would get. He has made sure of that—has my fine gentleman!

Hilda.

Then, good heavens—if that is so—can’t you tell the least little bit of a lie for once in a way?

Solness.

A lie? [Raging.] Hilda—take those devil’s drawings out of my sight!

Hilda.

[Draws the portfolio a little nearer to herself.] Well, well, well—don’t bite me.—You talk of trolls—but I think you go on like a troll yourself. [Looks round.] Where do you keep your pen and ink?

Solness.

There is nothing of the sort in here.

Hilda

[ Goes towards the door.] But in the office where that young lady is——

Solness.

Stay where you are, Hilda!—I ought to tell a lie, you say. Oh yes, for the sake of his old father I might well do that—for in my time I have crushed him, trodden him under foot——
HILDA.

Him, too?

SOLNESS.

I needed room for myself. But this Ragnar—he must on no account be allowed to come to the front.

HILDA.

Poor fellow, there is surely no fear of that. If he has nothing in him—

SOLNESS.

[Comes closer, looks at her, and whispers.] If Ragnar Brovik gets his chance, he will strike me to the earth. Crush me—as I crushed his father.

HILDA.

Crush you? Has he the ability for that?

SOLNESS.

Yes, you may depend upon it he has the ability! He is the younger generation that stands ready to knock at my door—to make an end of Halvard Solness.

HILDA.

[Looks at him with quiet reproach.] And yet you would bar him out. Fie, Mr. Solness!

SOLNESS.

The fight I have been fighting has cost heart's blood enough.—And I am afraid, too, that the helpers and servers will not obey me any longer.
Then you must go ahead without them. There is nothing else for it.

It is hopeless, Hilda. The luck is bound to turn. A little sooner or a little later. Retribution is inexorable.

[Hilda. [In distress, putting her hands over her ears.] Don’t talk like that! Do you want to kill me? To take from me what is more than my life?

And what is that?

The longing to see you great. To see you, with a wreath in your hand, high, high up upon a church-tower. [Calm again.] Come, out with your pencil now. You must have a pencil about you?

[Solness. [Takes out his pocket-book.] I have one here.

[Hilda. [Lays the portfolio on the sofa-table.] Very well. Now let us two sit down here, Mr. Solness. [Solness seats himself at the table. Hilda stands behind him, leaning over the back of the chair.] And now we will write on the drawings. We must write very, very nicely and cordially—for this horrid Ruar—or whatever his name is.
Solness.

[Writes a few words, turns his head and looks at her.] Tell me one thing, Hilda.

Hilda.

Yes!

Solness.

If you have been waiting for me all these ten years—

Hilda.

What then?

Solness.

Why have you never written to me? Then I could have answered you.

Hilda.

[Hastily.] No, no, no! That was just what I did not want.

Solness.

Why not?

Hilda.

I was afraid the whole thing might fall to pieces.—But we were going to write on the drawings, Mr. Solness.

Solness.

So we were.

Hilda.

[Bends forward and looks over his shoulder while he writes.] Mind now, kindly and cordially! Oh how I hate—how I hate this Ruald—
ACT II

THE MASTER BUILDER

SOLNESS.

[Writing.] Have you never really cared for any one, Hilda?

HILDA.

[Harshly.] What do you say?

SOLNESS.

Have you never cared for any one?

HILDA.

For any one else, I suppose you mean?

SOLNESS.

[Looks up at her.] For any one else, yes. Have you never? In all these ten years? Never?

HILDA.

Oh yes, now and then. When I was perfectly furious with you for not coming.

SOLNESS.

Then you did take an interest in other people, too?

HILDA.

A little bit—for a week or so. Good heavens, Mr. Solness, you surely know how such things come about.

SOLNESS.

Hilda—what is it you have come for?
HILDA.

Don't waste time talking. The poor old man might go and die in the meantime.

SOLNESS.

Answer me, Hilda. What do you want of me?

HILDA.

I want my kingdom.

SOLNESS.

H'm——

He gives a rapid glance towards the door on the left, and then goes on writing on the drawings. At the same moment Mrs. Solness enters; she has some packages in her hand.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Here are a few things I have got for you, Miss Wangel. The large parcels will be sent later on.

HILDA.

Oh, how very, very kind of you!

MRS. SOLNESS.

Only my simple duty. Nothing more than that.

SOLNESS.

[Reading over what he has written.] Aline!

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes?
SOLNESS.

Did you notice whether the—the book-keeper was out there?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, of course, she was there.

SOLNESS.

[Puts the drawings in the portfolio.] H'm—

MRS. SOLNESS.

She was standing at the desk, as she always is—when I go through the room.

SOLNESS.

[Rises.] Then I'll give this to her, and tell her that—

HILDA.

[Takes the portfolio from him.] Oh, no, let me have the pleasure of doing that! [Goes to the door, but turns.] What is her name?

SOLNESS.

Her name is Miss Fosli.

HILDA.

Pooh, that sounds so cold! Her Christian name, I mean?

SOLNESS.

Kaia—I believe.
HILDA.

[Opens the door and calls out.] Kaia, come in here! Make haste! Mr. Solness wants to speak to you.

KAIA FOSLI appears at the door.

KAIA.

[Looking at him in alarm.] Here I am——?

HILDA.

[Handing her the portfolio.] See here, Kaia! You can take this home; Mr. Solness has written on them now.

KAIA.

Oh, at last!

SOLNESS.

Give them to the old man as soon as you can.

KAIA.

I will go straight home with them.

SOLNESS.

Yes, do. Now Ragnar will have a chance of building for himself.

KAIA.

Oh, may he come and thank you for all——?

SOLNESS.

[Harshly.] I won’t have any thanks! Tell him that from me.
KAIA.

Yes, I will—

SOLNESS.

And tell him at the same time that henceforward I do not require his services—nor yours either.

KAIA.

[Softly and quiveringly.] Not mine either?

SOLNESS.

You will have other things to think of now, and to attend to; and that is a very good thing for you. Well, go home with the drawings now, Miss Fosli. At once! Do you hear?

KAIA.

[As before.] Yes, Mr. Solness. [She goes out.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Heavens! what deceitful eyes she has.

SOLNESS.

She? That poor little creature?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh—I can see what I can see, Halvard— Are you really dismissing them?

SOLNESS.

Yes.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Her as well?
Solness.

Was not that what you wished?

Mrs. Solness.

But how can you get on without her? Oh well, no doubt you have some one else in reserve, Halvard.

Hilda.

[Playfully.] Well, I for one am not the person to stand at that desk.

Solness.

Never mind, never mind—it will be all right, Aline. Now all you have to do is to think about moving into our new home—as quickly as you can. This evening we will hang up the wreath—[Turns to Hilda]—right on the very pinnacle of the tower. What do you say to that, Miss Hilda?

Hilda.

[Looks at him with sparkling eyes.] It will be splendid to see you so high up once more.

Solness.

Me!

Mrs. Solness.

For Heaven's sake, Miss Wangel, don't imagine such a thing! My husband!—when he always gets so dizzy!

Hilda.

He get dizzy! No, I know quite well he does not!
Mrs. Solness.

Oh yes, indeed he does.

HILDA.

But I have seen him with my own eyes right up at the top of a high church-tower!

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, I hear people talk of that; but it is utterly impossible——

Solness.

[Vehemently.] Impossible——impossible, yes! But there I stood all the same!

Mrs. Solness.

Oh, how can you say so, Halvard? Why, you can’t even bear to go out on the second-storey balcony here. You have always been like that.

Solness.

You may perhaps see something different this evening.

Mrs. Solness.

[In alarm.] No, no, no! Please God I shall never see that. I will write at once to the doctor—and I am sure he won’t let you do it.

Solness.

Why, Aline——!

Mrs. Solness.

Oh, you know you’re ill, Halvard. This proves it! Oh God—Oh God! [She goes hastily out to the right.
HILDA.

[Looks intently at him.] Is it so, or is it not?

SOLNESS.

That I turn dizzy?

HILDA.

That my master builder d a r e s not— c a n n o t—climb as high as he builds?

SOLNESS.

Is that the way you look at it?

HILDA.

Yes.

SOLNESS.

I believe there is scarcely a corner in me that is safe from you.

HILDA.

[Looks towards the bow-window.] Up there, then. Right up there——

SOLNESS.

[Approaches her.] You might have the topmost room in the tower, Hilda—there you might live like a princess.

HILDA.

[Indefinably, between earnest and jest.] Yes, that is what you promised me.

SOLNESS.

D i d I really?
HILDA.

Fie, Mr. Solness! You said I should be a princess, and that you would give me a kingdom. And then you went and——Well!

SOLNESS.

[Cautiously.] Are you quite certain that this is not a dream—a fancy, that has fixed itself in your mind?

HILDA.

[Sharply.] Do you mean that you did not do it?

SOLNESS.

I scarcely know myself. [More softly.] But now I know so much for certain, that I——

HILDA.

That you——? Say it at once!

SOLNESS.

—that I ought to have done it.

HILDA.

[Exclaims with animation.] Don’t tell me you can ever be dizzy!

SOLNESS.

This evening, then, we will hang up the wreath—Princess Hilda.

HILDA.

[With a bitter curve of the lips.] Over your new home, yes.
Solness.

Over the new house, which will never be a home for me. [He goes out through the garden door.

HILDA.

[Looks straight in front of her with a far-away expression and whispers to herself. The only words audible are]—frightfully thrilling—
ACT THIRD

The large, broad veranda of Solness's dwelling-house. Part of the house, with outer door leading to the veranda, is seen to the left. A railing along the veranda to the right. At the back, from the end of the veranda, a flight of steps leads down to the garden below. Tall old trees in the garden spread their branches over the veranda and towards the house. Far to the right, in among the trees, a glimpse is caught of the lower part of the new villa, with scaffolding round so much as is seen of the tower. In the background the garden is bounded by an old wooden fence. Outside the fence, a street with low, tumble-down cottages.

Evening sky with sun-lit clouds.

On the veranda, a garden bench stands along the wall of the house, and in front of the bench a long table. On the other side of the table, an arm-chair and some stools. All the furniture is of wicker-work.

Mrs. Solness, wrapped in a large white crape shawl, sits resting in the arm-chair and gazes over to the right. Shortly after, Hilda Wangel comes up the flight of steps from the garden. She is dressed as in the last act, and wears her hat. She has in her bodice a little nosegay of small common flowers.

Mrs. Solness.

[Turning her head a little.] Have you been round the garden, Miss Wangel?
HILDA.
Yes, I have been taking a look at it.

MRS. SOLNESS.
And found some flowers too, I see.

HILDA.
Yes, indeed! There are such heaps of them in among the bushes.

MRS. SOLNESS.
Are there really? Still? You see I scarcely ever go there.

HILDA.
[Closer.] What! Don't you take a run down into the garden every day, then?

MRS. SOLNESS.
[With a faint smile.] I don't "run" anywhere, nowadays.

HILDA.
Well, but do you not go down now and then to look at all the lovely things there?

MRS. SOLNESS.
It has all become so strange to me. I am almost afraid to see it again.

HILDA.
Your own garden!
Mrs. Solness.

I don't feel that it is mine any longer.

Hilda.

What do you mean——?

Mrs. Solness.

No, no, it is not—not as it was in my mother's and father's time. They have taken away so much—so much of the garden, Miss Wangel. Fancy—they have parcelled it out—and built houses for strangers—people that I don't know. And they can sit and look in upon me from their windows.

Hilda.

[With a bright expression.] Mrs. Solness!

Mrs. Solness.

Yes!

Hilda.

May I stay here with you a little?

Mrs. Solness.

Yes, by all means, if you care to.

[Hilda moves a stool close to the arm-chair and sits down.

Hilda.

Ah—here one can sit and sun oneself like a cat.
Mrs. Solness.

[Lays her hand softly on Hilda's neck.] It is nice of you to be willing to sit with me. I thought you wanted to go in to my husband.

Hilda.

What should I want with him?

Mrs. Solness.

To help him, I thought.

Hilda.

No, thank you. And besides, he is not in. He is over there with his workmen. But he looked so fierce that I did not dare to talk to him.

Mrs. Solness.

He is so kind and gentle in reality.

Hilda.

He!

Mrs. Solness.

You do not really know him yet, Miss Wangel.

Hilda.

[Looks affectionately at her.] Are you pleased at the thought of moving over to the new house?

Mrs. Solness.

I ought to be pleased; for it is what Halvard wants—
HILDA.

Oh, not just on that account, surely.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, yes, Miss Wangel; for it is only my duty to submit myself to him. But very often it is dreadfully difficult to force one’s mind to obedience.

HILDA.

Yes, that must be difficult indeed.

MRS. SOLNESS.

I can tell you it is—when one has so many faults as I have—-

HILDA.

When one has gone through so much trouble as you have—-

MRS. SOLNESS.

How do you know about that?

HILDA.

Your husband told me.

MRS. SOLNESS.

To me he very seldom mentions these things.—Yes, I can tell you I have gone through more than enough trouble in my life, Miss Wangel.

HILDA.

[Looks sympathetically at her and nods slowly.] Poor Mrs. Solness. First of all there was the fire—-
Mrs. Solness.

[With a sigh.] Yes, everything that was mine was burnt.

Hilda.

And then came what was worse.

Mrs. Solness.

[Looking inquiringly at her.] Worse?

Hilda.

The worst of all.

Mrs. Solness.

What do you mean?

Hilda.

[Softly.] You lost the two little boys.

Mrs. Solness.

Oh yes, the boys. But, you see, that was a thing apart. That was a dispensation of Providence; and in such things one can only bow in submission—yes, and be thankful, too.

Hilda.

Then you are so?

Mrs. Solness.

Not always, I am sorry to say. I know well enough that it is my duty—but all the same I cannot.

Hilda.

No, no, I think that is only natural.
Mrs. Solness.

And often and often I have to remind myself that it was a righteous punishment for me——

HILDA.

Why?

Mrs. Solness.

Because I had not fortitude enough in misfortune

HILDA.

But I don’t see that——

Mrs. Solness.

Oh, no, no, Miss Wangel—do not talk to me any more about the two little boys. We ought to feel nothing but joy in thinking of them; for they are so happy—so happy now. No, it is the small losses in life that cut one to the heart—the loss of all that other people look upon as almost nothing.

HILDA.

[Lays her arms on Mrs. Solness’s knees, and looks up at her affectionately.] Dear Mrs. Solness—tell me what things you mean!

Mrs. Solness.

As I say, only little things. All the old portraits were burnt on the walls. And all the old silk dresses were burnt, that had belonged to the family for generations and generations. And all mother’s and grandmother’s lace—that was burnt, too. And only think—the jewels, too! [Sadly.] And then all the dolls.
HILDA.
The dolls?

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Choking with tears.] I had nine lovely dolls.

HILDA.

And they were burnt too?

MRS. SOLNESS.

All of them. Oh, it was hard—so hard for me.

HILDA.

Had you put by all these dolls, then? Ever since you were little?

MRS. SOLNESS.

I had not put them by. The dolls and I had gone on living together.

HILDA.

After you were grown up?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, long after that.

HILDA.

After you were married, too?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh yes, indeed. So long as he did not see it——. But they were all burnt up, poor things. No one thought of saving them. Oh, it is so miserable to think of. You mustn't laugh at me, Miss Wangel.

HILDA.

I am not laughing in the least.

MRS. SOLNESS.

For you see, in a certain sense, there was life in them, too. I carried them under my heart—like little unborn children.

DR. HERDAL, with his hat in his hand, comes out through the door, and observes MRS. SOLNESS and HILDA.

DR. HERDAL.

Well, Mrs. Solness, so you are sitting out here catching cold?

MRS. SOLNESS.

I find it so pleasant and warm here to-day.

DR. HERDAL.

Yes, yes. But is there anything going on here? I got a note from you.

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Rises.] Yes, there is something I must talk to you about.

DR. HERDAL.

Very well; then perhaps we had better go in. [To HILDA.] Still in your mountaineering dress, Miss Wangel?
HILDA.

[Gaily, rising.] Yes—in full uniform! But to-day I am not going climbing and breaking my neck. We two will stop quietly below and look on, doctor.

DR. HERDAL.

What are we to look on at?

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Softly, in alarm, to HILDA.] Hush, hush—for God's sake! He is coming! Try to get that idea out of his head. And let us be friends, Miss Wangel. Don't you think we can?

HILDA.

[Throws her arms impetuously round MRS. SOLNESS's neck.] Oh, if we only could!

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Gently disengages herself.] There, there, there! There he comes, doctor. Let me have a word with you.

DR. HERDAL.

Is it about him!

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, to be sure it's about him. Do come in.

She and the doctor enter the house. Next moment SOLNESS comes up from the garden by the flight of steps. A serious look comes over HILDA's face.

SOLNESS.

[Glances at the house-door, which is closed cautiously from within.] Have you noticed, Hilda, that as soon as I come, she goes?
HILDA.

I have noticed that as soon as you come, you make her go.

SOLNESS.

HILDA.

I have just come up out of a tomb.

SOLNESS.

What do you mean by that?

HILDA.

That I have got chilled through and through, Mr. Solness.

SOLNESS.

[Slowly.] I believe I understand——

HILDA.

What brings you up here just now?

SOLNESS.

I caught sight of you from over there.

HILDA.

But then you must have seen her too?
I knew she would go at once if I came.

Solness.

Is it very painful for you that she should avoid you in this way?

Hilda.

In one sense, it's a relief as well.

Solness.

Not to have her before your eyes?

Yes.

Hilda.

Not to be always seeing how heavily the loss of the little boys weighs upon her?

Solness.

Yes. Chiefly that.

[Hilda drifts across the veranda with her hands behind her back, stops at the railing and looks out over the garden.

Solness.

[After a short pause.] Did you have a long talk with her? [Hilda stands motionless and does not answer.

Solness.

Had you a long talk, I asked?

[Hilda is silent as before.]
SOLNESS.
What was she talking about, Hilda?

[HILDA continues silent.

SOLNESS.
Poor Aline! I suppose it was about the little boys.

HILDA.

[A nervous shudder runs through her; then she nods hurriedly once or twice.

SOLNESS.
She will never get over it—never in this world. [Approaches her.] Now you are standing there again like a statue; just as you stood last night.

HILDA.

[Turns and looks at him, with great serious eyes.] I am going away.

SOLNESS.

[Sharply.] Going away!

HILDA.
Yes.

SOLNESS.
But I won't allow you to!

HILDA.
What am I to do here now?
Simply to be here, Hilda!

HILDA.

[Measures him with a look.] Oh, thank you. You know it wouldn’t end there.

SOLNESS.

[Heedlessly.] So much the better!

HILDA.

[Veheemently.] I cannot do any harm to one whom I know! I can’t take away anything that belongs to her.

SOLNESS.

Who wants you to do that?

HILDA.

[Continuing.] A stranger, yes! for that is quite a different thing! A person I have never set eyes on. But one that I have come into close contact with—! Oh no! Oh no! Ugh!

SOLNESS.

Yes, but I never proposed you should.

HILDA.

Oh, Mr. Solness, you know quite well what the end of it would be. And that is why I am going away.
SOLNESS.

And what is to become of me when you are gone? What shall I have to live for then?—After that?

HILDA.

[With the indefinable look in her eyes.] It is surely not so hard for you. You have your duties to her. Live for those duties.

SOLNESS.

Too late. These powers—these—these—

HILDA.

—devils—

SOLNESS.

Yes, these devils! And the troll within me as well—they have drawn all the life-blood out of her. [Laughs in desperation.] They did it for my happiness! Yes, yes! [Sadly.] And now she is dead—for my sake. And I am chained alive to a dead woman. [In wild anguish.] I—I who cannot live without joy in life!

[HILDA moves round the table and seats herself on the bench, with her elbows on the table, and her head supported by her hands.]

HILDA.

[Sits and looks at him awhile.] What will you build next?

SOLNESS.

[Shakes his head.] I don't believe I shall build much more.
HILDA.

Not those cosy, happy homes for mother and father, and for the troop of children?

SOLNESS.

I wonder whether there will be any use for such homes in the coming time.

HILDA.

Poor Mr. Solness! And you have gone all these ten years—and staked your whole life—on that alone.

SOLNESS.

Yes, you may well say so, Hilda.

HILDA.

[With an outburst.] Oh, it all seems to me so foolish—so foolish!

SOLNESS.

All what?

HILDA.

Not to be able to grasp at your own happiness—at your own life! Merely because some one you know happens to stand in the way!

SOLNESS.

One whom you have no right to set aside.
HILDA.

I wonder whether one really has not the right! And yet, and yet——. Oh! if one could only sleep the whole thing away!

[She lays her arms flat down on the table, rests the left side of her head on her hands, and shuts her eyes.

SOLNESS.

[Turns the arm-chair and sits down at the table.] Had you a cosy, happy home—up there with your father, Hilda?

HILDA.

[Without stirring, answers as if half asleep.] I had only a cage.

SOLNESS.

And you are determined not to go back to it?

HILDA.

[As before.] The wild bird never wants to go into the cage.

SOLNESS.

Rather range through the free air——

HILDA.

[Still as before.] The bird of prey loves to range——

SOLNESS.

[Lets his eyes rest on her.] If only one had the viking-spirit in life——
HILDA.

[In her usual voice; opens her eyes but does not move.] And the other thing? Say what that was!

SOLNESS.

A robust conscience.

[HILDA sits erect on the bench, with animation. Her eyes have once more the sparkling expression of gladness.

HILDA.

[Nods to him.] I know what you are going to build next!

SOLNESS.

Then you know more than I do, Hilda.

HILDA.

Yes, builders are such stupid people.

SOLNESS.

What is it to be then?

HILDA.

[Nods again.] The castle.

SOLNESS.

What castle?

HILDA

My castle, of course.
SOLNESS.

Do you want a castle now?

HILDA.

Don’t you owe me a kingdom, I should like to know?

SOLNESS.

You say I do.

HILDA.

Well—you admit you owe me this kingdom. And you can’t have a kingdom without a royal castle, I should think!

SOLNESS.

[More and more animated.] Yes, they usually go together.

HILDA.

Good! Then build it for me! This moment!

SOLNESS.

[Laughing.] Must you have that on the instant, too?

HILDA.

Yes, to be sure! For the ten years are up now, and I am not going to wait any longer. So—out with the castle, Mr. Solness!

SOLNESS.

It’s no light matter to owe you anything, Hilda.
HILDA.

You should have thought of that before. It is too late now. So—[tapping the table]—the castle on the table! It is my castle! I will have it at once!

SOLNESS.

[More seriously, leans over towards her, with his arms on the table.] What sort of castle have you imagined, Hilda?

[Her expression becomes more and more veiled. She seems gazing inwards at herself.

HILDA.

[Slowly.] My castle shall stand on a height—on a very great height—with a clear outlook on all sides, so that I can see far—far around.

SOLNESS.

And no doubt it is to have a high tower!

HILDA.

A tremendously high tower. And at the very top of the tower there shall be a balcony. And I will stand out upon it——

SOLNESS.

[Involuntarily clutches at his forehead.] How can you like to stand at such a dizzy height——?

HILDA.

Yes, I will! Right up there will I stand and look down on the other people—on those that are building churches, and homes for mother and father and the troop of children. And you may come up and look on at it, too.

Solness.

In a low tone. Is the builder to be allowed to come up beside the princess?

Hilda.

If the builder will.

Solness.

More softly. Then I think the builder will come.

Hilda.

Nods. The builder—he will come.

Solness.

But he will never be able to build any more. Poor builder!

Hilda.

Animated. Oh yes, he will! We two will set to work together. And then we will build the loveliest—the very loveliest—thing in all the world.

Solness.

Intently. Hilda—tell me what that is!

Hilda.

Looks smilingly at him, shakes her head a little, pouts, and speaks as if to a child. Builders—they are such very—very stupid people.
Solness.

Yes, no doubt they are stupid. But now tell me what it is—the loveliest thing in the world—that we two are to build together?

HILDA.

[Is silent a little while, then says with an indefinable expression in her eyes.] Castles in the air.

Solness.

Castles in the air?

HILDA.

[Nods.] Castles in the air, yes! Do you know what sort of thing a castle in the air is?

Solness.

It is the loveliest thing in the world, you say.

HILDA.

[Rises with vehemence, and makes a gesture of repulsion with her hand.] Yes, to be sure it is! Castles in the air—they are so easy to take refuge in. And so easy to build, too—[looks scornfully at him]—especially for the builders who have a—a dizzy conscience.

Solness.

[Rises.] After this day we two will build together, Hilda.

HILDA.

[With a half-dubious smile.] A real castle in the air?
Solness.

Yes. One with a firm foundation under it.

Ragnar Brovik comes out from the house. He is carrying a large, green wreath with flowers and silk ribbons.

Hilda.

[With an outburst of pleasure.] The wreath! Oh, that will be glorious!

Solness.

[In surprise.] Have you brought the wreath, Ragnar?

Ragnar.

I promised the foreman I would.

Solness.

[Relieved.] Ah, then I suppose your father is better?

Ragnar.

No.

Solness.

Was he not cheered by what I wrote?

Ragnar.

It came too late.

Solness.

Too late!

Ragnar.

When she came with it he was unconscious. He had had a stroke.
Solness.

Why, then, you must go home to him! You must attend to your father!

Ragnar.

He does not need me any more.

Solness.

But surely you ought to be with him.

Ragnar.

She is sitting by his bed.

Solness.

[Rather uncertainly.] Kaia?

Ragnar.

[Looking darkly at him.] Yes—Kaia.

Solness.

Go home, Ragnar—both to him and to her. Give me the wreath.

Ragnar.

[ Suppresses a mocking smile.] You don't mean that you yourself——?

Solness.

I will take it down to them myself. [Takes the wreath from him.] And now you go home; we don't require you to-day.
Ragnar.

I know you do not require me any more; but to-day I shall remain.

Solness.

Well, remain then, since you are bent upon it.

Hilda.

[At the railing.] Mr. Solness, I will stand here and look on at you.

Solness.

At me!

Hilda.

It will be fearfully thrilling.

Solness.

[In a low tone.] We will talk about that presently, Hilda.

[He goes down the flight of steps with the wreath, and away through the garden.

Hilda.

[Looks after him, then turns to Ragnar.] I think you might at least have thanked him.

Ragnar.

Thanked him? Ought I to have thanked him?

Hilda.

Yes, of course you ought!
Ragnar.

I think it is rather you I ought to thank.

Hilda.

How can you say such a thing?

Ragnar.

[Without answering her.] But I advise you to take care, Miss Wangel! For you don't know him rightly yet.

Hilda.

[Ardently.] Oh, no one knows him as I do!

Ragnar.

[Laughs in exasperation.] Thank him, when he has held me down year after year! When he made father disbelieve in me—made me disbelieve in myself! And all merely that he might—!

Hilda.

[As if divining something.] That he might——? Tell me at once!

Ragnar.

That he might keep her with him.

Hilda.

[With a start towards him.] The girl at the desk.

Ragnar.

Yes.
HILDA.

[Threateningly, clenching her hands.] That is not true! You are telling falsehoods about him!

RAGNAR.

I would not believe it either until to-day—when she said so herself.

HILDA.

[As if beside herself.] What did she say? I will know! At once! at once!

RAGNAR.

She said that he had taken possession of her mind—her whole mind—centred all her thoughts upon himself alone. She says that she can never leave him—that she will remain here, where he is—

HILDA.

[With flashing eyes.] She will not be allowed to!

RAGNAR.

[As if feeling his way.] Who will not allow her?

HILDA.

[Rapidly.] He will not either!

RAGNAR.

Oh no—I understand the whole thing now. After this, she would merely be—in the way.
HILDA.

You understand nothing—since you can talk like that! No, I will tell you why he kept hold of her.

RAGNAR.

Well then, why?

HILDA.

In order to keep hold of you.

RAGNAR.

Has he told you so?

HILDA.

No, but it is so. It must be so! [Wildly.] I will—I will have it so!

RAGNAR.

And at the very moment when you came—he let her go.

HILDA.

It was you—you that he let go! What do you suppose he cares about strange women like her?

RAGNAR.

[Reflects.] Is it possible that all this time he has been afraid of me?

HILDA.

He afraid! I would not be so conceited if I were you.
Ragnar.

Oh, he must have seen long ago that I had something in me, too. Besides—cowardly—that is just what he is, you see.

Hilda.

He! Oh yes, I am likely to believe that!

Ragnar.

In a certain sense he is cowardly—he, the great master builder. He is not afraid of robbing others of their life's happiness—as he has done both for my father and for me. But when it comes to climbing up a paltry bit of scaffolding—he will do anything rather than that.

Hilda.

Oh, you should just have seen him high, high up—at the dizzy height where I once saw him.

Ragnar.

Did you see that?

Hilda.

Yes, indeed I did. How free and great he looked as he stood and fastened the wreath to the church vane!

Ragnar.

I know that he ventured that, once in his life—one solitary time. It is a legend among us younger men. But no power on earth would induce him to do it again.

Hilda.

To-day he will do it again!
THE MASTER BUILDER

ACT III

Ragnar.

[Scornfully.] Yes, I daresay!

Hilda.

We shall see it!

Ragnar.

That neither you nor I will see.

Hilda.

[With uncontrollable vehemence.] I will see it! I will and I must see it!

Ragnar.

But he will not do it. He simply dare not do it. For you see he cannot get over this infirmity—master builder though he be.

Mrs. Solness comes from the house on to the veranda.

Mrs. Solness.

[Looks around.] Is he not here? Where has he gone to?

Ragnar.

Mr. Solness is down with the men.

Hilda.

He took the wreath with him.

Mrs. Solness.

[Terrified.] Took the wreath with him! Oh God! oh God! Brovik—you must go down to him! Get him to come back here!
Ragnar.

Shall I say you want to speak to him, Mrs. Solness?

Mrs. Solness.

Oh yes, do!—No, no—don’t say that I want anything! You can say that somebody is here, and that he must come at once.

Ragnar.

Good. I will do so, Mrs. Solness.

[He goes down the flight of steps and away through the garden.

Mrs. Solness.

Oh, Miss Wangel, you can’t think how anxious I feel about him.

Hilda.

Is there anything in this to be so terribly frightened about?

Mrs. Solness.

Oh yes; surely you can understand. Just think, if he were really to do it! If he should take it into his head to climb up the scaffolding!

Hilda.

[Eagerly.] Do you think he will?

Mrs. Solness.

Oh, one can never tell what he might take into his head. I am afraid there is nothing he mightn’t think of doing.
HILDA.

Aha! Perhaps you too think that he is—well—?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh, I don't know what to think about him now. The Doctor has been telling me all sorts of things; and putting it all together with several things I have heard him say—

DR. HERDAL looks out, at the door.

DR. HERDAL.

Is he not coming soon?

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, I think so. I have sent for him at any rate.

DR. HERDAL.

[Advancing.] I am afraid you will have to go in, my dear lady—

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh no! Oh no! I shall stay out here and wait for Halvard.

DR. HERDAL.

But some ladies have just come to call on you—

MRS. SOLNESS.

Good heavens, that too! And just at this moment!

DR. HERDAL.

They say they positively must see the ceremony.
Mrs. Solness.

Well, well, I suppose I must go to them after all. It is my duty.

HILDA.

Can’t you ask the ladies to go away?

Mrs. Solness.

No, that would never do. Now that they are here, it is my duty to see them. But do you stay out here in the meantime—and receive him when he comes.

Dr. Herdal.

And try to occupy his attention as long as possible——

Mrs. Solness.

Yes; do, dear Miss Wangel. Keep as firm hold of him as ever you can.

HILDA.

Would it not be best for you to do that?

Mrs. Solness.

Yes; God knows that is my duty. But when one has duties in so many directions——

Dr. Herdal.

[Looks towards the garden.] There he is coming

Mrs. Solness.

And I have to go in!
Dr. Herdal.

[To Hilda.] Don’t say anything about my being here.

Hilda.

Oh no! I daresay I shall find something else to talk to Mr. Solness about.

Mrs. Solness.

And be sure you keep firm hold of him. I believe you can do it best.

[Mrs. Solness and Dr. Herdal go into the house. Hilda remains standing on the veranda. Solness comes from the garden, up the flight of steps.

Solness.

Somebody wants me, I hear.

Hilda.

Yes; it is I, Mr. Solness.

Solness.

Oh, is it you, Hilda? I was afraid it might be Aline or the Doctor.

Hilda.

You are very easily frightened, it seems!

Solness.

Do you think so?
HILDA.

Yes; people say that you are afraid to climb about—on the scaffoldings, you know.

SOLNESS.

Well, that is quite a special thing.

HILDA.

Then it is true that you are afraid to do it?

SOLNESS.

Yes, I am.

HILDA.

Afraid of falling down and killing yourself?

SOLNESS.

No, not of that.

HILDA.

Of what, then?

SOLNESS.

I am afraid of retribution, Hilda.

HILDA.

Of retribution? [Shakes her head.] I don’t understand that.

SOLNESS.

Sit down, and I will tell you something.
HILDA.

Yes, do! At once!

[SHE SITS ON A STOOL BY THE RAILING, AND LOOKS EXPECTANTLY AT HIM.

SOLNESS.

[THROWS HIS HAT ON THE TABLE.] You know that I began by building churches.

HILDA.

[NODS.] I know that well.

SOLNESS.

For, you see, I came as a boy from a pious home in the country; and so it seemed to me that this church-building was the noblest task I could set myself.

HILDA.

Yes, yes.

SOLNESS.

And I venture to say that I built those poor little churches with such honest and warm and heartfelt devotion that—that—

HILDA.

That—? Well?

SOLNESS.

Well, that I think that he ought to have been pleased with me.

HILDA.

He? What he?
SOLNESS.

He who was to have the churches, of course! He to whose honour and glory they were dedicated.

HILDA.

Oh, indeed! But are you certain, then, that—that he was not—pleased with you?

SOLNESS.

[Scornfully.] He pleased with me! How can you talk so, Hilda? He who gave the troll in me leave to lord it just as it pleased. He who bade them be at hand to serve me, both day and night—all these—all these—

HILDA.

Devils—

SOLNESS.

Yes, of both kinds. Oh no, he made me feel clearly enough that he was not pleased with me. [Mysteriously.] You see, that was really the reason why he made the old house burn down.

HILDA.

Was that why?

SOLNESS.

Yes, don't you understand? He wanted to give me the chance of becoming an accomplished master in my own sphere—so that I might build all the more glorious churches for him. At first I did not understand what he was driving at; but all of a sudden it flashed upon me.
HILDA.

When was that?

SOLNESS.

It was when I was building the church-tower up at Lysanger.

HILDA.

I thought so.

SOLNESS.

For you see, Hilda—up there, amidst those new surroundings, I used to go about musing and pondering within myself. Then I saw plainly why he had taken my little children from me. It was that I should have nothing else to attach myself to. No such thing as love and happiness, you understand. I was to be only a master builder—nothing else. And all my life long I was to go on building for him. [Laughs.] But I can tell you nothing came of that!

HILDA.

What did you do, then?

SOLNESS.

First of all, I searched and tried my own heart—

HILDA.

And then?

SOLNESS.

Then I did the impossible—I no less than he.

HILDA.

The impossible?
Solness.

I had never before been able to climb up to a great, free height. But that day I did it.

Hilda.

[Leaping up.] Yes, yes, you did!

Solness.

And when I stood there, high over everything, and was hanging the wreath over the vane, I said to him: Hear me now, thou Mighty One! From this day forward I will be a free builder—I too, in my sphere—just as thou in thine. I will never more build churches for thee—only homes for human beings.

Hilda.

[With great sparkling eyes.] That was the song that I heard through the air!

Solness.

But afterwards his turn came.

Hilda.

What do you mean by that?

Solness.

[Looks despondently at her.] Building homes for human beings—is not worth a rap, Hilda.

Hilda.

Do you say that now?
Solness.

Yes, for now I see it. Men have no use for these homes of theirs—to be happy in. And I should not have had any use for such a home, if I had had one. [With a quiet, bitter laugh.] See, that is the upshot of the whole affair, however far back I look. Nothing really built; nor anything sacrificed for the chance of building. Nothing, nothing! the whole is nothing!

Hilda.

Then you will never build anything more?

Solness.

[With animation.] On the contrary, I am just going to begin!

Hilda.

What, then? What will you build? Tell me at once!

Solness.

I believe there is only one possible dwelling-place for human happiness—and that is what I am going to build now.

Hilda.

[Looks fixedly at him.] Mr. Solness—you mean our castles in the air.

Solness.

The castles in the air—yes.

Hilda.

I am afraid you would turn dizzy before we got halfway up.
Solness.

Not if I can mount hand in hand with you, Hilda.

Hilda.

[With an expression of suppressed resentment.] Only with me? Will there be no others of the party?

Solness.

Who else should there be?

Hilda.

Oh—that girl—that Kaia at the desk. Poor thing—don’t you want to take her with you too?

Solness.

Oho! Was it about her that Aline was talking to you?

Hilda.

Is it so—or is it not?

Solness.

[Veheemently.] I will not answer such a question. You must believe in me, wholly and entirely!

Hilda.

All these ten years I have believed in you so utterly—so utterly.

Solness.

You must go on believing in me!
HILDA.

Then let me see you stand free and high up!

SOLNESS.

[Sadly.] Oh Hilda—it is not every day that I can do that.

SOLNESS.

[Passionately.] I will have you do it! I will have it! [Imploringly.] Just once more, Mr. Solness! Do the impossible once again!

SOLNESS.

[Stands and looks deep into her eyes.] If I try it, Hilda, I will stand up there and talk to him as I did that time before.

HILDA.

[In rising excitement.] What will you say to him?

SOLNESS.

I will say to him: Hear me, Mighty Lord—thou may'st judge me as seems best to thee. But hereafter I will build nothing but the loveliest thing in the world—

HILDA.

[Carried away.] Yes—yes—yes!

SOLNESS.

—build it together with a princess, whom I love—
HILDA.

Yes, tell him that! Tell him that!

SOLNESS.

Yes. And then I will say to him: Now I shall go down and throw my arms round her and kiss her——

HILDA.

—many times! Say that!

SOLNESS.

—many, many times, I will say!

HILDA.

And then——?

SOLNESS.

Then I will wave my hat—and come down to the earth—and do as I said to him.

HILDA.

[With outstretched arms.] Now I see you again as I did when there was song in the air!

SOLNESS.

[Looks at her with his head bowed.] How have you become what you are, Hilda?

HILDA.

How have you made me what I am?
Solness.

[Shortly and firmly.] The princess shall have her castle.

Hilda.

[Jubilant, clapping her hands.] Oh, Mr. Solness——! My lovely, lovely castle. Our castle in the air!

Solness.

On a firm foundation.

[In the street a crowd of people has assembled, vaguely seen through the trees. Music of wind-instruments is heard far away behind the new house.

Mrs. Solness, with a fur collar round her neck, Doctor Herdal with her white shawl on his arm, and some ladies, come out on the veranda. Ragnar Brovik comes at the same time up from the garden.

Mrs. Solness.

[To Ragnar.] Are we to have music, too?

Ragnar.

Yes. It's the band of the Mason's Union. [To Solness.] The foreman asked me to tell you that he is ready now to go up with the wreath.

Solness.

[Takes his hat.] Good. I will go down to him myself.

Mrs. Solness.

[Anxiously.] What have you to do down there, Halvard?
ACT III]   THE MASTER BUILDER

SOLNESS.

[Curtly.] I must be down below with the men.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Yes, down below—only down below.

SOLNESS.

That is where I always stand—on everyday occasions.

[He goes down the flight of steps and away through the garden.

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Calls after him over the railing.] But do beg the man to be careful when he goes up! Promise me that, Halvard!

DR. HERDAL.

[To Mrs. Solness.] Don't you see that I was right? He has given up all thought of that folly.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh, what a relief! Twice workmen have fallen, and each time they were killed on the spot. [Turns to HILDA.] Thank you, Miss Wangel, for having kept such a firm hold upon him. I should never have been able to manage him.

DR. HERDAL.

[Playfully.] Yes, yes, Miss Wangel, you know how to keep firm hold on a man, when you give your mind to it.

[MRS. SOLNESS and DR. HERDAL go up to the ladies, who are standing nearer to the steps and looking over the garden. HILDA remains standing beside the railing in the foreground. RAGNAR goes up to her.

RAGNAR.

[With suppressed laughter, half whispering.] Miss Wangel—do you see all those young fellows down in the street?

HILDA.

Yes.

RAGNAR.

They are my fellow students, come to look at the master.

HILDA.

What do they want to look at him for?

RAGNAR.

They want to see how he daren't climb to the top of his own house.

HILDA.

Oh, that is what those boys want, is it?

RAGNAR.

[Spitefully and scornfully.] He has kept us down so long—now we are going to see him keep quietly down below himself.

HILDA.

You will not see that—not this time.
Ragnar.

[Smiles.] Indeed! Then where shall we see him?

Hilda.

High—high up by the vane! That is where you will see him!

Ragnar.

[Laughs.] Him! Oh yes, I daresay!

Hilda.

His will is to reach the top—so at the top you shall see him.

Ragnar.

His will, yes; that I can easily believe. But he simply cannot do it. His head would swim round, long, long before he got half-way. He would have to crawl down again on his hands and knees.

Dr. Herdal.

[Points across.] Look! There goes the foreman up the ladders.

Mrs. Solness.

And of course he has the wreath to carry too. Oh, I do hope he will be careful!

Ragnar.

[Stares incredulously and shouts.] Why, but it's——
[Breaking out in jubilation.] It is the master builder himself?

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Screams with terror.] Yes, it is Halvard! Oh my great God——! Halvard! Halvard!

DR. HERDAL.

Hush! Don't shout to him!

MRS. SOLNESS.

[Half beside herself.] I must go to him! I must get him to come down again!

DR. HERDAL.

[Hold her.] Don't move, any of you! Not a sound!

HILDA.

[Immovable, follows SOLNESS with her eyes.] He climbs and climbs. Higher and higher! Higher and higher! Look! Just look!

RAGNAR.

[Breathless.] He must turn now. He can't possibly help it.

HILDA.

He climbs and climbs. He will soon be at the top now.

MRS. SOLNESS.

Oh, I shall die of terror. I cannot bear to see it.
Dr. Herdal.

Then don't look up at him.

Hilda.

There he is standing on the topmost planks. Right at the top!

Dr. Herdal.

Nobody must move! Do you hear?

Hilda.

[Exulting, with quiet intensity.] At last! At last! Now I see him great and free again!

Ragnar

[Almost voiceless.] But this is im——

Hilda.

So I have seen him all through these ten years. How secure he stands! Frightfully thrilling all the same. Look at him! Now he is hanging the wreath round the vane!

Ragnar.

I feel as if I were looking at something utterly impossible.

Hilda.

Yes, it is the impossible that he is doing now! [With the indefinable expression in her eyes.] Can you see any one else up there with him?
Ragnar.

There is no one else.

Hilda.

Yes, there is one he is striving with.

Ragnar.

You are mistaken.

Hilda.

Then do you hear no song in the air, either?

Ragnar.

It must be the wind in the tree-tops.

Hilda.

I hear a song—a mighty song! [Shouts in wild jubilation and glee.] Look, look! Now he is waving his hat! He is waving it to us down here! Oh, wave, wave back to him! For now it is finished! [Snatches the white shawl from the Doctor, waves it, and shouts up to Solness.] Hurrah for Master Builder Solness!

Dr. Herdal.

Stop! Stop! For God's sake——!

[The ladies on the veranda wave their pocket-handkerchiefs, and the shouts of "Hurrah" are taken up in the street below. Then they are suddenly silenced, and the crowd bursts out into a shriek of horror. A human body, with planks and fragments of wood, is vaguely perceived crashing down behind the trees.
Act III] The Master Builder

Mrs. Solness and the Ladies.

[At the same time.] He is falling! He is falling!

Mrs. Solness totters, falls backwards, swooning, and is caught, amid cries and confusion, by the ladies. The crowd in the street breaks down the fence and storms into the garden. At the same time Dr. Herdal, too, rushes down thither. A short pause.

HILDA.

[Stares fixedly upwards and says, as if petrified.] My Master Builder!

RAGNAR.

[Supports himself, trembling, against the railing.] He must be dashed to pieces—killed on the spot.

One of the Ladies.

[Whilst Mrs. Solness is carried into the house.] Run down for the Doctor——

RAGNAR.

I can't stir a foot——

Another Lady.

Then call to some one!

RAGNAR.

[Tries to call out.] How is it? Is he alive?

A Voice.

[Below, in the garden.] Mr. Solness is dead!
The head is all crushed.—He fell right into the quarry.

HILDA.

[Turns to Ragnar, and says quietly.] I can't see him up there now.

RAGNAR.

This is terrible. So, after all, he could not do it.

HILDA.

[As if in quiet spell-bound triumph.] But he mounted right to the top! And I heard harps in the air. [Waves her shawl in the air, and shrieks with wild intensity.] My—my. Master Builder!

FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

INTRODUCTION

This volume contains all the notes, sketches, drafts, and other "foreworks" (as he used to call them) for Ibsen's plays from Pillars of Society onwards. They were published in Scandinavia and Germany in 1909, under the editorship of those learned and devoted Ibsen scholars, Halvdan Koht and Julius Elias. They occupied somewhat less than one-half of the three volumes of the poet's Efterladte Skrifter, or (to use the consecrated but somewhat unfortunate English phrase) his Literary Remains. The other contents of these three volumes are of great interest for special students of Ibsen's biography; but not until the period of his modern plays is reached do his drafts and jottings assume what may be called worldwide importance. The papers here translated throw invaluable light upon the genesis of his ideas and the development of his technique. They are an indispensable aid to the study of his intellectual processes during that part of his career which made him world-famous.

The first volume of the Norwegian edition is very varied in its contents. About half of it is occupied by early poems, including the boyish verses to Hungary and to King Oscar, written about 1848, which were probably the "first heirs of his invention." Most of the contents of this section are occasional pieces—prologues, student songs, etc.—but in some of the lyrics we find the germs of ideas to which he afterwards gave more finished form. Then come some miscellaneous prose pieces, ranging from one or two of his school themes, which have somehow been preserved, to the singularly laconic and unrhetorical speeches of his later years. The remaining pages are given up to hitherto unpublished plays and dramatic fragments, dating from the 'fifties and early 'sixties. The most important of these is the romantic comedy St. John's Night, produced in Bergen, January 2, 1853. This very youthful but not uninteresting play was known to exist in manuscript, and had been described by Ibsen's biographers; but, during his lifetime, he had not suffered it to be printed. It is a vivacious and really imaginative piece of work, containing foretastes both of Love's Comedy and of Peer Gynt. Its culminating scene is a midnight revel of fairy folk, which is witnessed by two pairs of mortal lovers. The pair who are really in touch with nature and with things elemental, see it as it is, while the conventional and affected romanticists take it for a dance of peasants around a bonfire. We have here the germ of several passages in the poet's maturer work. Another item of interest in the first volume is a fragment entitled Svanhild, being the first sketch, in prose, of what afterwards became Love's Comedy. Ibsen said that he abandoned this form because he had not yet the art of writing modern prose dialogue. I should rather be disposed to say that he had not a theme adapted for treatment in prose. There is practically no action in the play—none of that complex interweaving of the past with the present, and of event with character, which afterwards formed the substance of his art. We have only a group of people expressing certain ideas on life and love—ideas which naturally tend to shape themselves in lyric or satiric verse. The form, in short, was indicated by the lack of substance. The theme was a very thin one, which needed the starch of metre.

The second volume of the Norwegian edition opens with the so-called "epic Brand"—the fragment of a narrative version of Brand, which is described by Professor Herford in his Introduction to that play. Then come sundry chips from the workshop in which Brand and Peer Gynt were wrought to perfection. In the Peer Gynt fragments there are one or two points of interest, to which I have alluded in my Introduction. The preliminary sketches for The League of Youth are of small importance, except in so far as they show that the play grew and developed very little in the course of incubation. Far more interesting are the long scenarios and drafts which preceded the final form of Emperor and Galilean. A pretty full account of them may be found in my Introduction to the "world-historic drama." This brings us down to Pillars of Society and to the sketches and drafts included in the present volume.

Whatever he may have been in youth, Henrik Ibsen, in maturity and age, was the most reticent of artists. It is said, I believe with truth, that even his wife and son knew nothing of what he was meditating and hatching out, until each new play was polished to the last syllable. In the Introduction to An Enemy of the People may be found an anecdote of his apparently disproportionate anger when he learned that some loose scrap of paper had revealed the fact that the hero of the play on which he was then engaged was to be a doctor. In his correspondence he never indicates or discusses the themes which are occupying him, except when he is asking for historical material to be used in Emperor and Galilean. So far as my own experience went, he never said more of his work than that he was "preparing some devilment for next year." I remember, too, that, when he was engaged on When We Dead Awaken, he told me that he thought of describing it as "An Epilogue."

It seems like an irony of fate that this ultra-secrective craftsman, so jealous of the privacy of his workroom, should, after death, have all his pigeon-holes ransacked, and even the contents of his waste-paper basket, one might say, given to the world. At first sight this may seem like a profanation; but on looking into the matter we find no just cause for sentimental regret. If Ibsen had been violently averse from any posthumous study of his methods, he had safety in his own hands—he could always have destroyed his papers. He seems, on the contrary, to have treasured them with considerable care. The drafts and experiments for his romantic plays (Lady Inger, The Vikings, and The Pretenders) were scattered in a sale of his effects after he left Norway, in 1864, and have not yet been recovered. He was very angry when he heard of their dispersal; but he was probably not thinking of the loss to posterity. What he resent at the time, no doubt, was the thought that unknown and irreverent persons might be prying into his secrets while he lived. Was he, perhaps, recalling this experience when he made Lövborg, in Hedda Gabler, speak so bitterly of the possible profanation of his lost manuscript? Be this as it may, we find that not even the wandering life which he led for so many years interfered with his habit of treasuring up the chips from his workshop. It will be seen that this volume contains "foreworks" of more or less importance for all his plays from Pillars of Society onwards, with the single exception of An Enemy of the People. We do not know what has become of the sketches and studies for this play. He produced it in half the time that he usually gave to the ripening of a dramatic creation, and seems, indeed, to have thrown it off with unusual facility and gusto. Still, it is difficult to suppose that he dispensed altogether with preliminary notes and jottings. We must rather conclude that they have been accidentally lost or destroyed.

As he carefully preserved his papers, and as he left his executors a free hand to deal with them as they thought fit, they would have done the world a great wrong had they decided to suppress documents of such unique interest. Nowhere else, so far as I am aware, do we obtain so clear a view of the processes of a great dramatist’s mind. There is something of the same interest, no doubt, in a comparison of the early quartos of Romeo and Juliet and Hamlet with the completed plays; but in these cases we cannot decide with any certainty how far the incompleteness of the earlier versions represents an actual phase in the growth of the plays, and how far it is due to the bad stenography of the playhouse pirates. In Ibsen’s manuscripts we can actually follow the growth of an idea in his mind; distinguish what is original and fundamental in his conception from accretions and after-thoughts; see him straying into blind alleys and trying back again; and estimate the faultless certainty of taste with which he strengthened weak points in his fabric, and rejected the commonplace in favour of the rare and unforgettable. Not once, I think, is a scene or a trait suppressed which ought to have been preserved; not once is a speech altered for the worse. Sometimes, indeed, we find him using absolutely commonplace ideas and phrases which he must have known to be temporary makeshifts, awaiting transfiguration at a later stage. How much he relied upon the final revision of his work is apparent from a curious expression of which he makes use in a letter to Theodor Caspari, dated Rome, 27th June, 1884. “I have just completed a play in five acts,” he says; and then adds: “that is to say, the rough draft of it; now comes the elaboration, the more energetic individualisation of the persons and their modes of expression.” The play in question was The Wild Duck. Any one who compares the draft in the following pages with the finished play will see that what Ibsen called “elaboration” amounted, at some points, almost to reinvention.

In the Introductions to the various plays, in the Subscription edition, I have pretty fully compared the earlier with the final forms. As the reader has now before him the complete text of the sketches and drafts, and can make the comparison for himself, it will be sufficient if I briefly direct his attention to some of the most significant features of these "foreworks."

PILLARS OF SOCIETY

Of this play we have three brief and fragmentary scenarios, two almost complete drafts of the first act, an almost entirely rejected draft of the beginning of the second act, and large fragments of a draft of the fourth act.

Here we at once discover that Ibsen was not one of the playwrights who have their plays clearly mapped out before they put pen to paper. Even in the second draft of the first act, he is still fumbling around after his characters and their relations. That the actual plot was still obscure to him while he was writing the first draft appears from several indications. It is only in the second draft that the reappearance of Johan and Lona causes Bernick to display any uneasiness. Moreover we find in the first draft that "Madam Dorf," Dina's mother, is still alive, and that Dina is in the habit of paying her surreptitious visits; whence we may assume that the light to be thrown on Bernick's past was in some way intended to proceed from her. While she was alive, at any rate, Bernick would scarcely try to suppress the scandal by sending Johan and his documents to sea in a coffin-ship. This could not occur to him while the best witness to the true state of affairs was living at his very doors. Thus we see that the actual intrigue of the play was a rather late after-thought.

A prominent character in both drafts of the first act is Bernick's blind mother, who has disappeared from the finished play. Mads Tönnesen, nicknamed "the Badger," the father of Mrs. Bernick, Johan and Hilmar, was destined to drop out of this play, and to reappear, under the name of Morten Kiil, in An Enemy of the People. The business of the railway is taken up at a much later stage in the completed play than in the drafts—a good instance of the condensation to which Ibsen invariably subjected his work. Another instance may be found in the treatment of Johan Tönnesen and Lona Hessel. In the first draft they are not half brother and sister, but only, it would seem, distant cousins; they have not been together in America; and it is by pure chance that they arrive on the same day. The farcical scene at the end of the first act in this draft may perhaps be taken as showing that Ibsen at first thought of giving the whole play a lighter tone of colouring than that which he ultimately adopted. Perhaps he conceived it rather as a companion-piece to The League of Youth than as a new departure on the path that was to lead him so far.

A DOLL'S HOUSE

Of A Doll's House we possess a first brief memorandum, a fairly detailed scenario, a complete draft, in quite actable form, and a few detached fragments of dialogue. The complete draft is perhaps the most valuable of all the documents contained in this volume, since it shows us how, at a point at which many dramatists would have been more than content to write "Finis," the most characteristic part of Ibsen's work was only about to begin.

It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that all the traits which have most deeply impressed themselves on the public mind, and which constitute the true individuality of the play, prove to have been introduced during the process of revision. This assertion the reader must verify for himself, by a comparison of the texts: I will merelyenumerate a few of the traits of which the draft contains no indication. In the first act, the business of the macaroons is not even suggested; there is none of the charming talk about the Christmas tree and the children’s presents; no request on Nora’s part that her present may take the form of money, no indication on Helmer’s part that he regards her supposed extravagance as an inheritance from her father. It is not able throughout that neither Helmer’s aestheticism nor the sensual element in his relation to Nora is nearly so much emphasised as in the completed play; while Nora’s tendency to small fibbing—that vice of the unfree—scarcely appears at all. In the first scene with Dr. Rank, there is no indication either of the doctor’s ill health or of his pessimism: it seems as though he had at first been designed as a mere confidant. In the draft, Nora, Helmer, and Rank discuss the case of Krogstad in a dispassionate way before Nora has learnt how vital it is to her. An enormous improvement was effected by the suppression of this untimely passage, which discounted the effect of the scene at the end of the act. That scene is not materially altered in the final version; but the first version contains no hint of the business of decorating the Christmas tree, or of Nora’s wheedling Helmer by pretending to need his aid in devising her costume for the fancy-dress ball. Indeed this ball has not yet entered Ibsen's mind. He thinks of it first as a children's party.

In the second act there is no scene with Mrs. Linden in which she remonstrates with Nora for having (as she thinks) borrowed money from Dr. Rank, and so suggests to her the idea of applying to him for aid. In the scene with Helmer, we miss, among other characteristic traits, his confession that the ultimate reason why he cannot keep Krogstad in the bank is that Krogstad, as an old schoolfellow, is so tactless as to tutoyer him. When Rank enters, he speaks to Helmer and Nora together of his failing health: it is an immeasurable improvement which transfers this passage, in a carefully polished form, to his scene with Nora alone. Of the famous silk- stocking scene—that curious side light on Nora's relations with Helmer—there is not a trace. There is no hint of Nora's appeal to Rank for help, nipped in the bud by his declaration of love for her. All these elements we find in the second draft of the scene. In this draft, Rank says, "Helmer himself might quite well know every thought I have ever had of you; he shall know them when I am gone." If Ibsen had retained this speech it might have saved much critical misunderstanding of a perfectly harmless episode. Even when the end of the second act is reached, Ibsen has not yet conceived the idea of the fancy-ball and the rehearsal of the tarantella. It is not a very admirable invention, but it is at any rate better than the strained and arbitrary incident which, in the draft, brings the act to a close.

Very noteworthy is the compression and simplification to which Ibsen has subjected the earlier scenes of the third act. In the draft, they are clumsy and straggling. The scene between Helmer, Nora and Rank has absolutely none of the subtlety and tragic intensity which it has acquired in the finished form. To compare the two versions is to see a perfect instance of the transmutation of dramatic prose into dramatic poetry. There is in the draft no indication either of Helmer’s being warmed with wine, or of the excitement of the senses which gives the final touch of tragedy to Nora’s despair. The process of the action in the final scene is practically the same in both versions; but everywhere the revision has given a sharper edge to things. In the draft, for instance, when Krogstad’s letter has lifted the weight of apprehension from Helmer’s mind, he cries, “You are saved, Nora, you are saved!” In the revised form, Ibsen has cruelly altered this into “I am saved, Nora, I am saved!” Finally, we have to note that Nora’s immortal repartee, “Millions of women have done so,” was an after-thought. Was there ever a more brilliant one?

GHOSTS

Of the studies for Ghosts only a few brief fragments have been preserved. The most important of these are mere casual memoranda, some of them written on the back of an envelope addressed to “Madame Ibsen, 75 via Capo le Case, Città (that is to say, Rome). These memoranda fall into six sections, of which the fourth and fifth seem to have as much bearing on other plays—for instance, on An Enemy of the People and The Lady from the Sea—as on Ghosts. I should take them rather for detached jottings than for notes specially referring to that play.

THE WILD DUCK

The drafts of The Wild Duck, though rather fragmentary, are very interesting and important. They show that the general outline of the play was pretty well established from an early stage; but they also show it to have been enormously enriched in detail in the final revision. This is particularly notable in the character of Hedvig. In the drafts, she is a quite commonplace girl; all the delicacy and beauty of the character, which make her fate so heart-rending, was added during that process of "energetic individualisation" to which the poet refers in his letter to Caspari. It is worth noting, too, that in all these drafts there is no allusion either to old Werle's weak eyes or to Hedvig's threatened blindness: that idea, which at once helped out the plot of the play, added to the pathos of Hedvig's figure, and illustrated Hialmar's selfishness in allowing her to strain her eyes over the retouching which he himself ought to have done, was entirely an afterthought. An idea which presents itself in a rudimentary form in the first draft is that of Hialmar Ekdal's "invention"—here called his "problem." The later development of this wonderful "invention" forms a very good specimen of Ibsen's method. Everywhere, on a close comparison of the texts, we see an intensive imagination lighting up, as it were, what was at first somewhat cold and colourless. In this case, as in many others, the draft suggests a transparency before the electricity has been switched on.
ROSMERSHOLM

We can trace this play to its completion from a very embryonic form. It is clear that, when the poet jotted down the earliest memorandum, he had as yet no idea of the tragedy of Rebecca's relation to Beata; for he could scarcely have described as "somewhat unscrupulous" a woman who, under the mask of friendship, goaded another to suicide. Rosmer, we see, was to have had two daughters; but they soon disappeared from this play, to reappear as Boletta and Hilda Wangel in The Lady from the Sea.

The drafts of Rosmersholm afford a good example of the way in which Ibsen almost always fumbled around for the names of his characters. It is fortunate that Rebecca did not eventually retain the name of "Miss Badeck," which would have lent itself, in English, to somewhat too facile pleasantries of the type in vogue among "Anti-Ibsenite" critics of the 'nineties. At one stage in the incubation of the play, we find Rebecca figuring as "Mrs. Rosmer"; but she very soon, so to speak, comes unmarried again. The student of technique may learn a valuable lesson in noting the improvement effected in the finished play by the transference of Rosmer's confession of his change of faith from the second act to the first. Another point worth noting is the fact that in the first draft of the first Brendel scene we find Brendel coming forward as a champion of land-nationalisation, and greatly disappointed on learning that he has been anticipated in a well-known book—an allusion, no doubt, to Henry George's Progress and Poverty. Ibsen showed his usual fine instinct in abandoning this idea.

THE LADY FROM THE SEA

The sketches and drafts of The Lady from the Sea show that the theme was a good deal modified in the course of incubation. Wangel, as at first conceived, was entirely different, both in character and in profession, from the Wangel of the finished play. Several characters appear in the original jottings who have disappeared from the play as we know it: among them one who was treasured up for seventeen years, to come to life ultimately as the delightful Foldal of John Gabriel Borkman. The story of Ellida was much more commonplace in its original conception than it eventually became—it "suffered a sea change Into something rich and strange." But the most remarkable fact which the "foreworks" bring to light is that Arnholm and the Stranger were formed by the scission, so to speak, of one character, denominated the "Strange Passenger"—possibly not without a certain reference to the personage of that name in Peer Gynt.

HEDDA GABLER

Almost the first germs of Hedda Gabler seem to have come to the poet in the form of scraps of dialogue, roughly jotted down. In his original conception, Tesman was to have been much more of an active intermediary between Hedda and Lövborg than he became in the end. It was Tesman who, at her instigation, was to lure LOVBORG to BRACK’S ORGY; and it was apparently TESMAN who was actually to make away with, or misappropriate, LOVBORG’S MANUSCRIPT. BOTH TESMAN AND MRS. ELMSTED were to have known much more of the former “COMRADESHIP” between LOVBORG and HEDDA than they do in the play. There is no hint of any “MADMOISELLE DIANA” in the draft: when HEDDA asks MRS. ELMSTED who the woman is whom LOVBORG cannot forget, she replies point-blank, “IT IS YOURSELF, HEDDA.” MRS. ELMSTED’S LUXURIANT HAIR AND HEDDA’S JEALOUSY OF IT ARE AFTERTHOUGHTS; SO IS THE FAMOUS CONCEPTION OF LOVBORG “WITH VINE-LEAVES IN HIS HAIR.” IN THE STAGE-DIRECTION FOR THE BURNING OF LOVBORG’S MANUSCRIPT, THE ALLUSION TO THE “WHITE LEAVES” AND “BLUE LEAVES” EVIDENTLY BELONGS TO SOME PHASE IN THE WORKING-OUT OF THE PLAY OF WHICH NO OTHER TRACE REMAINS. IT IS INTERESTING TO SPECULATE ON WHAT MAY HAVE BEEN IN THE POET’S MIND; BUT I AM NOT AWARE THAT ANY SATISFACTORY SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM HAS AS YET BEEN OFFERED.

THE MASTER BUILDER

The preliminary studies for this play are scanty and of slight interest. They nowhere indicate any considerable change of plan. Perhaps the most noteworthy trait in them occurs where SOLNESS is giving HILDA an account of his progress in his profession. His work is in demand, he says, far and wide; “and now, of late years, they are beginning to take an interest in me abroad.” Probably this touch was struck out because it showed too clearly the identity of SOLNESS and his creator.
LITTLE EYOLF

In spite of several gaps, the draft of Little Eyolf may be called fairly complete. Here again revision amounted almost to reinvention; and it was the reinvention that determined the poetic value of the play. The poet's original idea (though he doubtless knew very well that this would not be final) was simply to study a rather commonplace wife's jealousy of a rather commonplace child. The lameness of Eyolf proves to have been an after-thought; and as Eyolf is not lame, it follows that the terrible cry of "The crutch is floating" was also an after-thought, as well as the almost intolerable scene of recrimination between Allmers and Rita as to the accident which caused his lameness. We find, in fact, that nearly everything that gives the play its depth, its horror and its elevation came as an after-thought. The suggestion of the "evil eye" motive is of the very slightest. Instead of the exquisite beauty of the final scene in its ultimate form, we have a page of almost conventional sentimentalising over Eyolf's continued existence in the hearts of his parents. Instead of telling her the wonderful tale of his meeting with Death in the mountains, Alfred reads to Rita the poem of which Ibsen had written as a first hint for The Master Builder. In no case, perhaps, did revision work such a transfiguration as in Little Eyolf.
JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN

Only brief and unimportant fragments of the preliminary studies for this play have been preserved. They tell us nothing more noteworthy than that Borkman at first bore the incurably prosaic name of Jens, and that he was originally conceived as occupying his leisure by playing Beethoven on the violin, to a pianoforte accompaniment provided by Frida Foldal.

WHEN WE DEAD AWAKEN

In the preliminary studies for When We Dead Awaken there are several curious features, but nothing of very great significance. We look in vain for the note referred to in the following anecdote, related in the Christiania Aftenpost, for April 16, 1911, by the dramatist Gunnar Heiberg. The Norwegian actress who played Irene in the original production gave her a rather juvenile appearance,—with Ibsen’s approval, it was reported. “Tell me, Dr. Ibsen,” Heiberg said to him one day, “how old is Irene?” He replied, “Irene is 28 years old.”

“That is impossible,” said I.
He looked at me, measured me up and down, and said with crushing quietness, “You naturally know better, don’t you?”
“Yes, I do,” I answered. And I set to work to prove that Irene must be at least 40 years old. . .
“Irene is supposed to be 28,” Ibsen interrupted me. “And why do you ask, since you know all about it?”
He went away annoyed.
Next day, I received a letter from him, which ran thus:
"Dear Gunnar Heiberg, You were right and I was wrong. I have looked up my notes. Irene is about 40 years old.
"Yours,
HENRIK IBSEN."

The note determining Irene's age does not seem to have been preserved; but it ought to have been sufficient to refer to the text.

PILLARS OF SOCIETY
ARGUMENT

First Act

An open garden-room in the house of "the great leader of industry." The ladies of the place are met together, doing needlework for the benefit of the "Lapsed and Lost." The schoolmaster has been reading an edifying book to the ladies. In the background the manufacturer talking business to influential men belonging to the town and neighbourhood. Violent scene with Valborg, who finds it unbearable here and wishes to go home to her mother. The merchant enters in triumph, because it appears that the projected new railway can be carried through. The dialogue brings out information about all kinds of antecedent circumstances. "The Old Badger" comes in with news of the damaged ship. Who is the captain? Arrival of the steamer. The captain enters and is recognised. Olaf comes from school; announces that Aunt Lona is on the steamer. General surprise and mixed feelings. She shows herself at the garden gate just as the curtain falls.

Second Act

The new arrivals upset things considerably in the town. Rumours of the captain's great wealth and of the former scandal with Valborg's mother. The schoolmaster begins to think of becoming engaged to Valborg. Beginning of conflict between the manufacturer and the captain.
Third Act

We hear of irregularities in the repairing of the ship. The engagement is announced and celebrated. The captain decides to leave the country. Fresh reports from the yard. The manufacturer undecided; it is to be kept quiet for the time being.

Fourth Act

Secret understanding between the captain and Valborg. The railway scheme assured. Great ovations. Flight of Olaf with the departing couple. Thrilling final catastrophe.——

PERSONS

Bennick, a merchant, owner of forests and factories.
Mrs. Bennick, his wife.
Mrs. Colonel Bennick, his mother.
Margrete, her daughter.
Mads Tönnesen, a ship-owner and builder.
Emil (Hilmar) Tönnesen, his son.
Rörstad, a schoolmaster.
Madam Dorf, a former actress.
Dina, her daughter.
Miss Hassel.
Captain John Tennyson.
Evensen, a private tutor.

First Act

Introductory scene. Hints of Bernick's numerous plans. The former worldly life of the town. Lona Hassel's departure. The ladies go out into the verandah to take coffee. Exchange of words between the schoolmaster and Dina, who on the previous evening has secretly visited her mother. Hilmar Tønnesen enters. Mr. Bernick and old Tønnesen come in from the left together with some of the best men of the town, all involuntarily struck by Bernick’s plan of setting on foot a railway project. Great scene of conflict between different points of view. Bernick propounds his superior view and the duties of the individual to society. Arrival of the steamer. Olaf enters with Miss Hassel, who brings the news that Captain John Tennyson is (was) on board.

SECOND ACT

A part of the garden of Bernick’s house, with the street and a row of houses at the back. Dina in the garden; Hilda and Netta come along the street; they question her about the American; fantastic rumours in circulation. Bernick and Knap enter in front from the left; the master-carpenter is to be sent for; Knap goes out through the garden gate. Sandstad passes; dialogue with B. Rumours of the purchase by an English company of all the large properties in the surrounding district. Sandstad off. Old Tønnesen enters with both his sons. These three go up the garden steps to the ladies. Bernick and Aune, the master-carpenter. Aune off. The Tønnesens re-enter with all the ladies and the schoolmaster, also Miss Hessel. The schoolmaster proposes to Dina;

NOTES

Mrs. R. and Mrs. H. are at first thinking of the schoolmaster for their daughters; after his engagement they turn their attention to the American.
PILLARS OF SOCIETY

1ST ACT

Introductory scene: The Ladies' Union assembled in the merchant's house; the schoolmaster present.

Hilmar Tønnesen enters; Dina sent for the coffee-things; the ladies one by one go out on to the balcony.

Old Tønnesen enters; he and Hilmar go out.

Bernick and business men enter; the business men off.

1ST ACT

(Room in Bernick's House.)

The situation with regard to Aune is prepared. Meeting of the ladies. Dina and the schoolmaster. Hilmar, and later old Tønnesen. The merchant and the magnates of the town; the railway affair; Bernick's explanation of proposals. Return home of the American captain and Miss Hessel, etc.

2ND ACT

(Bernick's garden.)

Bernick and his wife in the garden. Afterwards the ladies. Aune has been degraded. Rumours of the great purchases of property in the neighbourhood. The schoolmaster enters. Old Tønnesen and both his sons. Lona Hessel. Johan and his million. Conflict. The schoolmaster proposes to Dina.

3RD ACT

(The walk by the shore.)

Johan, Olaf and the girls, also Martha. Johan and Marta; explanation between them. Johan and Ber-nick; the old affairs are touched upon. The head of the office confides to Bernick what he has noticed at the ship-yard; Bernick wishes to see for himself. The great rustic festival is decided upon; difficulties in the way of the railway.

4TH ACT

(In the park.)

The great rustic festival is held. Many people from the town and neighbourhood. Bernick about to report Aune to the police. Johan threatens to disclose the affairs of his young days.

I

(An elegant and spacious garden-room in Bernick's house.
In front, to the left, a door leads into Bernick's office; farther back, in the same wall, a similar door. In the middle of the opposite wall is a large entrance door. The back wall is almost entirely composed of plate-glass, with an open doorway leading to a broad flight of steps, over which a sun-shade is let down. Beyond the steps a part of the garden can be seen, enclosed by a railing with a little gate. Beyond the railing, and running parallel with it, is a street of small, brightly painted wooden houses. It is summer, and the sun shines warmly. Now and then people pass along the street: they stop and speak to each other: customers come and go at the little shop nearly opposite, and so forth.)

Dr. Rörlund. Well, ladies, with this chapter I think we may conclude for to-day.

(He places a marker in the book and closes it with a bang.)

Mrs. Rummel. Oh, how delightful it is with books like that, that one doesn’t quite understand——

Dr. Rörlund. I beg your pardon?

Mrs. Rummel. Well, I mean—that one doesn’t see the meaning of at once——

Mrs. Salvesen. —and that one has to think over——

Mrs. Holt. —and that one has to read several times.

Mrs. Bernick Junior (with a fixed look). Yes [H’m]; such a book gives us indeed much to think about.

Dr. Rörlund (moving his chair nearer to the ladies).

1 A superior magistrate.
It is, one may say, a book for all. It is neither wholly poetry nor wholly philosophy; nor yet is it altogether a book of devotion. It is in a way something of all these. [It touches upon the most various spheres of existence.] And the whole is inspired by a gentle religious spirit. I consider that such books ought to be found in the palace as in the cottage, and in the cottage as in the palace. And they are found there, too. Heaven be praised—our people are still steadfast enough for that.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. I'm sure it would have lain a long while on our shelves, if you had not——

Dr. Rörlund. Your husband does not read much, I believe?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, how should he find time for it?

Mrs. Bernick Senior. You can't say that Karsten doesn't read much, Betty——

Mrs. Bernick Junior. He doesn't read that kind of book, I meant.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. My son reads enormously, Dr. Rörlund. But mostly works on political economy and other things that may be useful to him.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, and that doesn't do us any good. So it's really more than kind of you to give up your spare time to us.

Dr. Rörlund. But could I better apply a leisure hour? I consider that needlework should always be seasoned with good reading, especially when the work has such an object as here.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Ah, but it is a sacrifice on your part all the same, Dr. Rörlund.

Dr. Rörlund. Pray don't speak of it, dear lady. Do not all of you make sacrifices for a good cause? And do you not make them willingly and gladly? That is as it should be. The Lapsed and Lost, for whom we are working, are like wounded soldiers on a battlefield; you, ladies, are the Red Cross Guild, the Sisters of Mercy, who pick lint for these unhappy sufferers, tie the bandages gently round the wounds, dress, and heal them——

Mrs. Bernick Senior. It must be a great blessing to see everything in so beautiful a light.

Dr. Rörlund. The gift is largely inborn; but it can in some measure be acquired. Tribulation and affliction are a good school. I am sure that you, Mrs. Bernick, have become aware of a purer and more beautiful light even as your bodily eyes grew dim.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Ah, do not speak of that, Dr. Rörlund! I must confess I am often worldly enough to want to exchange the inner light, if I could recover the outer light instead.

Dr. Rörlund. We have all such moments of temptation. But we have to be on our guard. And, in truth, Mrs. Bernick, what have you really lost? Have you not much rather gained a barrier between yourself and the world? Are you not at your ease here in a circle of kind and sympathetic friends? Do you really find so much to attract you in the life you hear surging outside? Look at the people in the sweltering sunshine, toiling and moiling over their paltry affairs and paltry sorrows. Ours, surely, is the better part, sitting here in the pleasant shade, and turning our backs toward the quarter from which disturbance might arise.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Yes, no doubt you are quite right——

Dr. Rörlund. And in a house like this, in a good and pure home, where the Family is seen in its fairest shape, where peace and unity reign—— (To Mrs. Bernick Junior.) What are you listening to, Mrs. Bernick?
Mrs. Bernick Junior (who has turned towards the door of her husband’s room). How loudly they are talking in there!

Dr. Rörlund. Is anything particular going on?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. I don’t know. There is evidently someone with my husband.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Who can it be?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. I don’t know in the least——

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Why, that’s your father who is talking so loudly, Betty!

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, I believe it is——

(Hilmar Tönnesen, with a cigar in his mouth, comes in by the door on the right, but stops on seeing so many ladies.)

Hilmar. Oh, I beg your pardon——

(Turning to go.)

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Come in, Hilmar, come in. You are not disturbing us. Do you want anything?

Hilmar. No, I just happened to be passing. Good-morning, ladies. (To his sister.) Is he here still?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Who?

Hilmar. The old man.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, I can hear father in Bernick’s room. I didn’t know——

Hilmar. I wish I could guess what they want with him——

Mrs. Bernick Junior. But what is it at all——?

Hilmar. Don’t you know?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. No, I know nothing.

Hilmar. Don’t you know that Bernick has called a railway meeting?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Has he?

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Has Karsten?

Mrs. Rummel. A railway meeting?
Mrs. Salvesen. Is Mr. Bernick going to build a railway?

Mrs. Holt. Only think, if we were to have a railway here!

Dr. Rörlund. Oh, let us hope that is a very distant prospect.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. But what did father say to it?

Hilmar. Do you think he said anything? I don’t suppose he had any idea of what they were going to talk about. But I heard it from Knap. They’ve sent a list round to Sandstad, to Rasmussen—Rasmussen on the hill—and to Vigeland—and to the old man as well. Goodness knows why he should be in it.

Mrs. Rummel. But they are our capitalists, Mr. Tönnesen!

Hilmar. Yes, if capital could do it, it might perhaps succeed; but you want intelligence as well, and that’s a class of goods of which there is no great supply here—I mean in trading circles, of course!

Mrs. Rummel. No, I hardly think I can imagine it, Mrs. Holt!

Mrs. Holt. That we should have a railway here!

Hilda Rummel. Then we should be able to go by train on Sundays!

Dr. Rörlund. On Sundays?

Hilda Rummel. No, I meant on week-days.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Would you then really consider it harmful if we had a railway here, Dr. Rörlund?

Dr. Rörlund. No, I should by no means consider it absolutely harmful. Its harmfulness would depend upon so much else. Nor can one in our days cut one’s self off, even if one wished it. And even at the present time this town is connected in such manifold ways with the outer world and in contact with much that is not as it should be. It is not indeed a question of a temptation more or less, Mrs. Bernick! Of such we have enough already—both here and elsewhere. No, we must seek a shield and buckler in our own mind; but first and foremost, of course, with—; well, that is understood.

HILMAR. Well, I should be very glad if they could build us [if they would begin to squabble about] a railway. It would be a variety at least.

DR. RÖRLUND. Oh, I think there is quite enough variety here as it is.

HILMAR. Possibly. But here I am smoking. I really beg your pardon, ladies.

(Going towards the back.)

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. By all means smoke; I think it is a good cigar——

HILMAR. No, it's a very bad cigar; there isn't such a thing as a good cigar to be got in the whole town. That's another of the pleasures of provincial life. (Turning over the leaves of Rörlund's book.) "Hours of Repose in the Bosom of Nature." What rubbish is this!

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Oh, Hilmar, you mustn't say that! You have surely not read the book.

HILMAR. No, and don't intend to.

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. You seem out of sorts today.

HILMAR. Yes, I am.

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Perhaps you didn't sleep well last night?

HILMAR. No, I slept very badly. I went a walk yesterday evening, by my doctor's orders, and came across Evensen. Then we went up to [looked in at] the club and stayed there till half past twelve. Evensen was telling me about a polar expedition. An extraordinary imagination that man has.

MRS. RUMMEL. Well, it doesn’t seem to have agreed with you.

HILMAR. No, I lay tossing all night half asleep, and dreamt I was being chased by a horrible walrus. Ugh, there he is shouting again!

THE LADIES. Who is shouting?

HILMAR. Old Tønnesen, of course. He never can moderate his voice, and it always makes me so nervous.

DR. RÖRLUND. The others are not whispering either, it seems to me. I fear Mr. Bernick is being sorely tried.

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. When my son has resolved upon anything, he is capable of carrying it out, Dr.
Rörlund!

MRS. RUMMEL. Yes, indeed, he has shown that many a time. We have to thank Mr. Bernick for our water supply and the new street lamps——

MRS. HOLT. —and proper paving and trees in the market-place!

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. Dear me, yes! what a great change there has been in this town! When I think of the time when I was young——

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Oh, you needn’t go back more than twelve or fourteen years. And it is not only outwardly that things have changed, but inwardly almost more so. Heavens, what a life it was people led here!
There was a dancing club and a music club——

MARTHA. And the dramatic club—I remember it quite well.

MRS. RUMMEL. Yes; it was there your play was acted, Mr. Tønnesen.

[HILMAR. Oh, nonsense——!]
Mrs. Salvesen. Mr. Tönnesen's play? Wasn't it in that play you told me you played the heroine, Mrs. Rummel?

Mrs. Rummel (glancing at Rörlund). I? I really don't remember, Mrs. Salvesen. But I remember too well all the noisy gaiety that went on among families.

Mrs. Holt. Yes; I actually know houses where there were two great dinner-parties in one week.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. And in the summer we had picnic parties both on sea and land——

Dr. Rörlund. And that on Sundays too, from what I have been given to understand.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, at that time we knew no better. We even thought it extremely amusing.

Dr. Rörlund. Well, to unaided human nature such things are amusing. But we have to overcome that, Mrs. Bernick!

Mrs. Bernick Senior. I must say, though, that there were many circumstances which in a way excused us.

Dr. Rörlund. Excused——?

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Or, if they didn't excuse us, at any rate—well, the men at that time had little to do, and we women still less. We had our housekeeping and nothing else. None of our societies had then been started. Until you came here no one thought of anything of the kind.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. And yet there were serious people among us even then.

Dr. Rörlund. Were there really? And who were they?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, there were several.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Betty is no doubt thinking of Lona Hessel in particular.
Dr. Rörlund. Hessel? Is that the Miss Hessel who lives abroad?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes; she has lived abroad a long while; ever since—

Dr. Rörlund. How long, do you say?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. No, I can't remember exactly.

Mrs. Rummel. Oh, Mrs. Bernick, can't you remember, she went away just at the time you were married?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. No, I really don't remember that.

Mrs. Holt. She is probably roving about all over the place, in Germany, France, Italy.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. We have not heard from her for several years. She was a very distant relative of my late husband, Dr. Rörlund. But she never writes. Heaven knows whether she has found peace anywhere.

Dr. Rörlund. I doubt it, Mrs. Bernick! That peace which we lack within ourselves can scarcely be found outside. And least of all abroad. We see every day, both in newspapers and books, how matters stand there. Doubt and fermenting unrest on every side; the soul at war with itself, insecurity in every relation of life; disintegration of family life and a spirit of subversion in the great communities. No; we ought to thank God that our lot is ordered as it is. A tare, alas! will now and then spring up among the crop; but we live upon a soil where things can grow, whether they turn to good or evil.—Therefore, as I was saying, I should very much doubt that Miss Hessel has found peace far from home, if it was that she went to seek.

Martha. Perhaps we shall see sooner than anyone thinks.

Mrs. Holt. Yes, who was it said that she was coming home this summer?
Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, that has been said so many times. I don't suppose anything will come of it.

Martha. But this time it may come true.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Surely you know something, child; one can tell that from the way you speak.

Martha. No, indeed I know nothing; but I think——

Dr. Rörlund. Telegraph secrets! We must not enquire more closely.

Mrs. Rummel. Well, if she comes home this summer, she will find great changes indeed! She left just when things were at their worst, and the town was upside-down. That was the winter Möller's comedy company was here. Don't you remember, Mrs. Bernick, they played in Holm the sailmaker's hall?

Mrs. Bernick. Yes, very likely.

Mrs. Holt (with a glance at Mrs. Rummel). H'm—h'm.

Mrs. Rummel (without noticing it). No, there's no doubt about it. I remember it as clearly as if it were to-day. Yes, that winter there were fine doings in the town. Wasn't it that year that——?

Mrs. Holt (as before). H'm——!

Mrs. Rummel (noticing her). No, of course——. I don't know what I'm saying——

Mrs. Bernick Junior. But don't you think we'd better——?

Mrs. Salvesen. But what was the real truth of all the wild stories of that time? I am so new to the town that I don't know what happened——

Mrs. Rummel. Oh, it was really nothing after all, Mrs. Salvesen!

Mrs. Holt. Dina, dear, hand me that piece of linen, please.
Mrs. Bernick Junior (at the same time). Dina, my love, will you go and ask Katrina to bring the coffee into the verandah.

Martha. I will help you, Dina.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. And now we may put aside our work for to-day. Come, let me help you, mother dear! Will you come, ladies?

(She and Rörlund lead Mrs. Bernick Senior out to the verandah. The other ladies have risen and are arranging their work on the table in the room.)

Mrs. Rummel (softly). Oh dear, Mrs. Salvesen, how you frightened me!

Mrs. Salvesen. I?

Mrs. Holt. Ah, but you began it yourself, Mrs. Rummel.

Mrs. Rummel. I? Oh, how can you say so, Mrs. Holt? Not a single word passed my lips.

Mrs. Salvesen. But what is the matter?

Mrs. Rummel. How could you talk about—? Only think—didn’t you see that Dina was in the room?

Mrs. Salvesen. But, mercy on us, what is the matter?

Mrs. Holt. Here, in this house, too! Don’t you know that it was Mrs. Bernick’s brother—?

Mrs. Salvesen. What about him? I know nothing at all; remember I am quite new to the town—

Mrs. Rummel. Then you haven’t heard that—? H’m; don’t wait for us, Hilda.

Mrs. Holt. You go too, Netta. And be sure you are very kind to Dina when she comes.

(Hilda and Netta go out into the verandah.)
Mrs. Salvesen. Well, what about Mrs. Bernick’s brother?

Mrs. Rummel. Don’t you know, he was the hero of the scandal?

Mrs. Salvesen. Mr. Hilmar the hero of a scandal!

Mrs. Holt. No, not he, Mrs. Salvesen! It was the other brother——

Mrs. Rummel. The prodigal brother——

Mrs. Holt. Old Tönnesen’s youngest son; one who was a sailor. He ran away to America.

Mrs. Salvesen. And there was a scandal about him?

Mrs. Rummel. Yes, there was a sort of—what shall I call it?—a sort of a—with Dina’s mother.

Mrs. Salvesen. Oh, no! how unfortunate that I knew nothing——

Mrs. Rummel. Hush, there she comes. (Loud.) Yes, as you say, Dina is really quite a clever girl—What are you there, Dina? We are just finishing our work here.

Mrs. Holt. Ah, how nice your coffee smells, my dear Dina. It will be a treat to take a little cup of it.

(Martha and Dina have meanwhile helped the servant to bring in the coffee things. The ladies go out and sit down; they vie with each other in talking kindly to Dina. After a time she comes into the room and looks for her sewing.)

Mrs. Bernick Junior (on the verandah). Dina, don’t you want——?

Dina. No, thanks; I haven’t nearly finished.

(She takes her sewing and sits down on the right, with her back turned towards the end of the table. Mrs. Bernick Junior and Rörlund exchange a few words; a moment after, he comes into the room.)
RÖRLUND (goes up to the table, as if looking for something, and says in a low voice). Dina!
Dina. Yes!
RÖRLUND. Why will you not come out?
Dina. You know very well.
RÖRLUND. Do you think that anyone is speaking ill of—of one who is absent?
Dina. I am sure they are not speaking of one who is absent.
RÖRLUND. Well, what then?
Dina (quivering). I know that they are thinking about her—all of them.
RÖRLUND. Thinking evil?
Dina. No!
RÖRLUND. There, you see!
Dina. They do what is worse.
RÖRLUND. What is worse, then?
Dina. Oh, I know well enough; they pity her.
RÖRLUND. Do you call that worse?
Dina. Yes.
RÖRLUND. Yours is a rebellious nature, Dina.
Dina (softly). Yes.
RÖRLUND. What makes it so?
Dina. It has never been otherwise.
RÖRLUND. But could you not try to change?
Dina. No.
RÖRLUND. Do you not think it would be of any use?
Dina. No.
RÖRLUND. And why don't you think it would be of any use?
Dina. You know quite well why.
RÖRLUND. No, I do not. Tell me.
Dina (looks up at him firmly). Because I belong to the Lapsed and Lost.
RÖRLUND. Fie!
DINA. Mother and I belong to the Lapsed and Lost.
RÖRLUND. I am sure no one in this house has ever said that to you.
DINA. No, but they think it.
RÖRLUND. I have often seen signs of this distrust in you. Has it anything to do with your sometimes concealing your movements?
DINA. What do you mean by that?
RÖRLUND. Where were you late yesterday evening, Dina?
DINA (bending over her work). Do you know that too?
RÖRLUND. Where were you?
DINA. At home.
RÖRLUND. At home? I suppose you mean with your mother?
DINA. Yes.
RÖRLUND. I thought your home was here?
DINA. Yes, they have taken me into their house.
RÖRLUND. On condition that you do not visit your mother.
DINA. Yes.
RÖRLUND. And you promised that?
DINA. Yes.
RÖRLUND. And nevertheless you do visit her?
DINA. Yes.
RÖRLUND. In spite of your promise?
DINA. Such is my nature.
RÖRLUND. Why do you do it?
DINA. It is more amusing with her.
RÖRLUND. Indeed? Then what do you think it is here?
DINA. They are all good to me.
RÖRLUND. And these serious occupations and endeavours of ours—do you like taking part in them?

DINA. Yes.

RÖRLUND. For what reason?

DINA. Because you wish it.

RÖRLUND. Do you like doing something for my sake?

DINA. Yes, I do.

RÖRLUND. Why?

DINA. Because you are so much more perfect than the others.

RÖRLUND. What makes you think that, Dina?

DINA. Because you have taught me so much that is beautiful.

RÖRLUND. Beautiful? Do you call the truths of religion beautiful?

DINA. Yes.

RÖRLUND. What do you understand, then, by a beautiful thing?

DINA. I have never thought of that.

RÖRLUND. Then think of it now. What do you understand by a beautiful thing?

DINA. A beautiful thing is something great—and far away.

RÖRLUND. H'm. Listen, Dina, I want to say to you—. Oh, here they come.

(He goes up towards the verandah. At the same moment OLD TÖNNESEN comes noisily out of Mr. Bernick's room.)

MADS TÖNNESEN (in the doorway). No, no, no, I say! It's no use, I say! I'm off now, as sure as my name's Mads Tönnesen! (Slams the door.)

HILMAR TÖNNESEN (at the same time, to Mrs. Bernick Junior). There he is. Good-bye!

(Is hurrying off to the right.)
MADS TÖNNESEN. Hilmar! My son Hilmar, wait, we'll go together. You ought to have been in there, listening to your brother-in-law. I'm damned if I ever heard anything so mad!

HILMAR. Hush; don't swear so horribly. Can't you see Mrs. Bernick sitting out there?

MADS. What, is the old lady there? (Approaching.)

Good morning, ma'am.

HILMAR. Come on; come on.

MRS. BER Nick SENIOR. Good morning, Tönnesen.

What is going to be done about the railway?

MADS. It won't come to anything, ma'am; he wants to build it with our money; I never heard anything so unreasonable!

MRS. BER Nick SENIOR. But I suppose he will build it with his own as well.

MADS. Yes, he can do what he likes with his own money; he has plenty of it; and he earned it easily enough. But I, ma'am, who began with two empty fists—

HILMAR (still at the door). Hands—

MADS. I say fists, my son Hilmar! Yes, ma'am, I can tell you, they were empty then, and dirty too—

HILMAR. Ugh!

MADS. But that's the glory of labour, ma'am, and with those fists I hold on to what I've sweated so hard for—

HILMAR. Ugh, ugh, ugh!

MADS. Yes, I know very well people here give me nicknames and call me the Badger; but the Badger will show them that he has claws! Isn't that so, my son Hilmar?

HILMAR. Yes, only do come; come on!

MADS. Railway! As if I didn't know all about railways. When a young man over in America gets on board a railway, he's never seen again.—But why the devil can't you come, Hilmar! I'm sure the dinner's on the table long ago, and you stand here wasting my time talking!—Good-bye, ma'am; good-bye, Betty; good-bye, all!

(Old Tönnesen and his son go out to the right. At the same moment Sandstad, Rasmussen and Vigeland enter from the room on the left, followed by Bernick, who has a bundle of papers in his hand.)

Bernick. Well, gentlemen, I shall not regard this as a final refusal. At any rate take the papers home with you and try to make yourselves better acquainted with my calculations.

Sandstad. To tell the truth, I don't think that would be of any use, Mr. Bernick. According to my best convictions I cannot advise private individuals to venture their money in this; and still less can I be a party to voting any public funds.

Rasmussen. Nor I either.

Vigeland. To me it is evident that a railway project of this kind would be opposed to the most important interests of the town. Think of all our steamships in the coasting trade. What should we do with them?

Rasmussen. Yes, what should we do with the steamships?

Vigeland. And another thing. If we get a railway round here, then the neighbouring towns will also have a railway. No one can tell what changes this will bring about in the shipping trade.

Rasmussen. No, no one can tell that.

Bernick. But, gentlemen, what are you talking about? The country districts round here have produce enough both for us and for the neighbouring towns, if we only provide the means of communication.

Rasmussen. Yes, that's right.

Bernick. Just think of our great tracts of forest, which are now inaccessible. Think of the minerals it would allow us to work. Think of our water-power, with one waterfall above another;—what rare advantages for manufactures of all kinds!

Rasmussen. Yes, there are.

Vigeland. But all this would not benefit the town, Mr. Bernick!

Bernick. My dear Mr. Vigeland, it would benefit society; and what benefits society, would also benefit us. Therefore we ought, as enlightened citizens, to support the affair with all the powers that are at our disposal. But we must hold together; that is all-important! Take the draft prospectus home with you; go carefully through all my calculations; help me, if you find any error in the estimates;—here is one for you, Mr. Sandstad.

Sandstad. Well, there's no harm in taking them——

Rasmussen. No, there's no harm in that.

Sandstad. But I don't think anything will come of it.

Rasmussen. No, I don't either.

Bernick. Well, well, gentlemen, sleep on it first. Perhaps something will come of it after all. Men like yourselves cannot possibly be blind to all the prosperity and progress that lies behind this undertaking. It is only the novelty of the thing that takes you by surprise. And this disinclination to throw one's self at once into anything new and untried is very estimable, very honourable; it is a good and a characteristic side of our nation; I even venture to say, it is one of the best pillars of our society. But when we have once convinced ourselves of the desirability and opportuneness of a measure, then it is just as much our duty not to draw back, but to go through with it. Am I not right, we are all agreed on that?

VIGELAND. Well, I won’t say either one way or the other, but——

RASMUSSEN. No, I won’t either; but——

SANDSTAD. Then I’ll take the estimates with me, Mr. Bernick?

BERNICK. Yes, do so, my dear Mr. Sandstad. Discuss the matter among yourselves. And when we have got so far as to be able to lay it before the public in due form, you will see that the difficulties are not nearly so great as you now think.—Well, good-bye, gentlemen. I will not detain you any longer. I should greatly dislike to appear a schemer in your eyes; therefore I wish you as soon as possible to see the affair in its true light. Good day, Mr. Sandstad. Your children are quite well, I hope? Good-bye, my dear Mr. Vigeland. Good-bye, Mr. Rasmussen. Remember me to Mrs. Rasmussen. Good-bye, gentlemen; remember me very kindly at home!

(The three men take their leave and go out to the right.)

BERNICK (who has accompanied them to the door). Phew! that’s the first victory.

RÖRLUND. Do you call that a victory, Mr. Bernick?

BERNICK. Getting them to take the papers home? Yes, Dr. Rörlund, that was a great victory. I don’t expect anything more to begin with.

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR (approaching). My dear Karsten, what is the meaning of it?

BERNICK. Oh, my dear Betty, it can’t possibly interest you.

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR (on the verandah). Yes, Karsten, you must come and tell us——
Bernick. No, my dearest mother, it is something you and Betty don't understand.

Rörlund. There is some talk of a railway, so far as I could gather.

Bernick. Yes, you shall hear about it, Dr. Rörlund. You are a man of intelligence, and a man who stands outside local interests——

Rörlund. I am certainly far removed from the material interests.

Bernick. But still you keep pace with public affairs—do you not?

Rörlund. Yes, I read the papers, so far as my time permits; and of course one hears one thing and another.

Bernick. Good, then of course you know that there is talk of making a line of railway through the hills?

Rörlund. Yes, one that will not come down to our town.

Bernick. It won't touch any of the coast towns about here—if it is carried out. But that is what we are not going to permit!

Mrs. Bernick Senior. But, Karsten, why are you mixing yourself up in all this?

Bernick. H'm, my dear mother, it would take too long to explain——

Rörlund. Well, I am not a business man, of course; but still I too think that such things might be left to the Government.

Bernick. You do? Well, that is a view that we often hear expressed. But do you not really feel in yourself a call, a need, an impulse to support society in its striving for development and welfare?

Rörlund. Yes, I do; within the sphere that is allotted to me.

Bernick. Yes, within that sphere you are [...]. You are] certainly a pillar of spiritual society among us. But I am now thinking [more particularly] of practical life. And that is just where the Government is found wanting, Dr. Rörlund. The Government has the best intentions, but it sees no further than the needs of the moment; it is lacking in foresight; and it is for this reason that we practical men have to step in. We have been educated in the school of experience; we are—I think I may say so with all modesty—we are the best pillars of civil society; for by pillars of society I do not mean those men who support existing institutions, but those who promote reasonable and necessary progress.

MRS. RUMMEL (in the doorway to the verandah). Oh, how amusing it is——

BERNICK. Do you call it amusing, Mrs. Rummel?

MRS. RUMMEL. Yes, I think it is so amusing to hear men speaking.

BERNICK. Then you can look forward to a good deal of amusement, for we shall have plenty of speaking and writing, and quarrelling and wrangling. But it shall go! Ay, if I have to risk all I possess in the affair, I am determined to see it through.

MRS. SALVESEN. Do you think butter will be cheaper if we have a railway, Mr. Bernick?

BERNICK. It will bring prosperity to the whole community; that is all I can tell you for the moment. But, ladies, you must not mix yourselves up with the questions of the day; you must leave them to us men. Your place is in the home; there you must bring peace and comfort to those nearest and dearest to you, as my dear Betty, and my dear old mother bring peace and comfort to me and to Olaf. Why, where is Olaf?

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. He is not back from school yet.

(KNAP enters from the right.)
Knap. A ship for repairs, Mr. Bernick.

Bernick. Bravo! Who is it?

Bernick. And can we take her in?

Knap. I really don't know what to say. Things are going badly at the yard, Mr. Bernick. To-day the drilling-machine is out of order again; and the steam-plane won't work either.

Bernick. H'm, h'm; I don't believe Aune will ever learn to work with machines.

Knap. I don't believe he wants to learn; he has set himself against the machines ever since we put them in.

Bernick. Oh, we shall be able to get over that. But under any circumstances—we mustn't lose the American. What kind of ship is she?

Knap. The barque Indian Girl of New York, with dye-wood from Brazil to St. Petersburg.

Bernick. And the captain?

Knap. The captain went overboard in the North Sea, and the mate has delirium tremens. But a sailor, who was on board as a passenger, took command and brought the ship into Rægehavn.

Bernick. Then you haven't spoken to him?

Knap. Yes, I have; he was on the steamer.

Bernick. Oh, then the steamer's in?

Knap. Yes, and he has come in here with the crew to get more hands and to charter a tug. Here is his card.

Bernick (reads). "John Rawlinson, New Orleans." Then he's from the Southern States. Well, you must see that you give him all the help you can, Mr. Knap.

Knap. I'll do so, Mr. Bernick.

(He goes out again to the right.)
Mrs. Bernick Junior (calls from outside). Good news, Karsten?

Bernick. Business, my dear! You must be prepared to receive an American captain to dinner.

(Olaf Bernick, with a knapsack of school-books on his back, comes running up the street and through the garden-gate.)

Olaf. Mamma, mamma, I've been down seeing the steamboat! Do you know who was on board?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, child; I expect it was an American captain.

Olaf. How do you know that, mamma?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. I guessed it.

Olaf. Then can you guess that Aunt Lona was on board too?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. What are you saying?

Olaf. Yes, she was, mamma; I've seen her and spoken to her.

Bernick. Now you're not telling the truth, Olaf!

Olaf. Yes, I am telling the truth.

Bernick. No, you're not; for you don't know her.

Olaf. No, but Evensen was down on the pier, and he knew her.

Mrs. Bernick Junior (aside). So then——!

Mrs. Rummel. Only think—then she has come home after all!

Mrs. Holt. Well, what did I tell you, Mrs. Rummel? (Many travellers come up the street.)

Mrs. Rummel. Look, look! Well, I never—there she is, as large as life!

(Miss Hessel, in an elegant travelling costume, with a satchel and a plaid over her shoulder and a knapsack in her hand, comes up the street.)
Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, there she is! (Runs down to the garden-gate.) Lona, Lona! Welcome home!

Lona. Why, yes—good morning, Betty! (Calls up to the verandah.) Good morning, old auntie!

Mrs. Bernick Junior. But do come inside!

Lona. Thanks, presently, presently; I must go up to the hotel first and wash myself clean from top to toe; on the steamer you get as dirty as a pig. Au revoir!

(She goes on up the street.)

Mrs. Bernick Senior. She hasn’t changed, has she, Betty?

Mrs. Bernick Junior (looking after her). No,—and yet she has.

Rörlund. That lady appeared to me somewhat unwomanly.

Mrs. Holt. How funnily her dress was cut, Mrs. Rummel!

Mrs. Rummel. Yes, but did you notice her hat, Mrs. Holt?

Olaf. Hurrah, mamma, here come all the Americans!

Mrs. Rummel. No, look at these wild people; they’ve got a great flag——

Mrs. Holt. Ugh, I believe there are brown and black ones among them.

Mrs. Salvesen. The captain is almost the ugliest; he has a regular pirate’s face.

Rörlund. Yes, that fellow is capable of anything.

Bernick. Foreigners, Dr. Rörlund; we mustn’t be so particular.

(Captain Rawlinson and his crew, with the American flag at their head, come up the street, followed by a crowd of children and grown-up people.)
Bernick (waves his hand from the steps and calls out:) Good morning, Mr. Rawlinson! This way, if you please, sir! I am Mr. Bernick!

Capt. Rawlinson (waves his handkerchief and cries:) Very well, Karsten; but first three cheers for the old Badger! (The Americans and the whole crowd go past.)

Bernick (starting back). Ah!

Mrs. Bernick Senior (with a cry). Who spoke then?

Martha (involuntarily takes a step forward and cries:) Johan!

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Heavens—it was my brother!

Mrs. Rummel. Well, as I'm alive, I think so too——

Bernick (has composed himself and says calmly). It was Johan Tönnesen. What of it?

Mrs. Holt. Oh, what a surprise! And how well he looked.

Mrs. Salvesen. And how well that beard suited him, Mrs. Bernick!

Mrs. Bernick Junior (aside). Johan and Lona—on the same day——

Bernick. Well, now we shall have turbulent spirits among us.

Rörlund. I hope no one will succeed in introducing a disturbing element here. With the place in its present state—a home of peace and good order and domesticity——

Mrs. Rummel's Servant-Girl (enters through the garden-gate). Master sent me to say, ma'am, that you must please come home; Gurine has burnt the fish to a cinder.

Mrs. Rummel. Oh, these servants, these servants; one can never leave anything to them! Good-bye, good-bye; we shall meet to-morrow!

(She and the servant hurry off down the street.)
Mrs. Salvesen. Yes, that's what you can expect if you trust your house to the servants.

Mrs. Salvesen's Two Little Girls (come out of the chemist's shop, run to the garden-gate and call out.) Mamma, mamma, you must come and see; Nicholas has fallen into the wash-tub!

Mrs. Salvesen. What do you say, children! And he had his new blouse on!

The Little Girls. Oh, he is in a filthy mess!

Mrs. Salvesen. Oh, these children, these children! Good day! I must run as fast as I can.

(She and the little girls hurry into the chemist's shop.)

Mrs. Holt. Yes, that's what happens if you leave everything lying about. I make it my rule to lock things up; and the keys (slaps her pocket) I carry about with me.

The Postman (comes running down the street to the garden-gate). Oh, heavens, ma'am, you must hurry home; we shall miss the steamer.

Mrs. Holt. Miss the steamer?

Postman. Yes, the second bell's gone already, and the postmaster can't take the mails on board till you come, ma'am.

Mrs. Holt. What are you talking about? Can't the mails go on board without me?

Postman. No, ma'am; you've locked up the postmaster's trousers in the wardrobe.

Mrs. Holt. Mercy on us! Good-bye, good-bye till to-morrow! Oh, these men, these men, they never can do anything for themselves.

(She and the Postman run up the street.)

Rörlund. People here make too great demands on woman's time and energies.
Martha (aside). Come home——!
Mrs. Bernick Junior (aside). Both of them——!
Olaf (in the garden). Mamma, now the Americans are shouting hurrah outside grandpapa's!

(Noise and cries are heard far off; people appear at the windows; many people run up the street.)

Mrs. Bernick Senior (who has risen and is groping for the door). Karsten—don't you think as I do—that it is like ghosts from old times?

Bernick (starts up from his thoughts). Oh, come—ghosts? Yes, to you, dear mother—you in the dark, with your poor eyes—(kisses her) but I, you see, I am in the full light of day!

SECOND ACT

(Part of the garden outside Mr. Bernick's house. The house itself, which is not seen, is supposed to lie to the left. At the back is the garden railing with the street beyond; on the right an open arbour, in which is the ladies' work-table.)

(Bernick, dressed to go out, with gloves, stick and cigar, is walking in the garden. After a little while Mrs. Bernick Junior comes from the house with a quantity of sewing, which she places on the table.)

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Are you there, Karsten?
Bernick. Yes, of course I'm here.
Mrs. Bernick Junior. I thought you had gone to the office.
Bernick. I am waiting for somebody.
Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, perhaps it is Johan?
Bernick. No.
Mrs. Bernick Junior. Ugh, then it must be this railway business again?
Bernick. No, it's a man I've sent for here. Why, what can it matter to you?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, there's nothing strange in my asking.

(Dina enters with the rest of the sewing.)

Bernick. Are you going to work out here to-day?

Mrs. Bernick. Yes, Dr. Rörlund proposed that we should sit here.

Bernick. I see, it's more public here.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. I'm sure he didn't intend any ostentation by it.

Bernick. I didn't mean that either. There are loafers enough here who might take a lesson from seeing all these industrious ladies.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Ah, you're not much in sympathy with this cause, Karsten!

Bernick. Yes, indeed I am! Sew away—so long as domestic concerns are not neglected—. Isn't Martha at home to-day?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. No, Martha of course is on duty.

Bernick. That was a great piece of folly of hers, going into the telegraph service.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, I'm really afraid she hasn't strength enough for it.

Bernick. Oh, as far as strength goes, she can do it well enough. But it is unpleasant for me. It looks as if I, her brother, were unwilling to support her.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Well, but it isn't always so pleasant to be supported—even by one's nearest relations.

Bernick. A woman has to put up with that sort of thing. Why has she never wanted to marry? No, she is self-willed and stiff-necked, like most— Oh, now they’re beginning to arrive [here come Mrs. Rummel and her daughter].

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Here is Mrs. Holt and Netta too.

Bernick. What a hurry they’re in; I’m inclined to think those two good ladies have designs—

Mrs. Bernick Junior. How do you mean?

Bernick. Why do they always drag the daughters with them?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, you know we agreed that these two nice, well-brought-up girls were to be examples for Dina.

Bernick. H’m; a couple of mothers with marriage-able daughters are sure to have little designs of their own—

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Really, Karsten, can you imagine it is because he—

Bernick. Yes, he, he, he; all the women in the place speak of him as he,—and then they know at once who is meant.

(Mrs. Rummel with Hilda, and Mrs. Holt with Netta meet at the garden-gate and come in. At the same moment Mrs. Bernick Senior comes from the house, led by Dina, who has Rörlund’s book in her hand. There are greetings, all talking at once. During this Mrs. Salvesen joins them.)

Bernick. Your punctuality really compels my admiration, ladies! Never a minute behind time—

Mrs. Rummel. Oh, I can’t tell you how I long for these cosy hours of work—

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Did you bring the book, Dina?

Dina. Yes.

Mrs. Rummel. Oh, he’s sure not to come to-day.

Mrs. Holt. No, he’s sure not to—Bernick. Why not? It is holiday time, you know—

Mrs. R. Yes, that's true; but aren't you taking a holiday too, Mr. Bernick?

Bernick. You mean because I was taking a walk here with my wife? Dear me, one isn't a mere man of business and nothing else; one is also the head of a family—

Mrs. H. Yes, you may truthfully say that of yourself, Mr. Bernick—

Bernick. And one wants to enjoy the society of one's own circle; it is not a large one, but for that reason it is all the more closely bound together, Mrs. Holt.

Mrs. Rummel. Ah, but now it is a little enlarged, isn't it?

Bernick. Yes, since my brother-in-law has come home, you mean.

Mrs. R. They say he has become a perfect gentleman, as it is called—

Bernick. He has improved a good deal—the life over there on a large scale, you see—in the war he served in the Navy as a lieutenant—

Mrs. R. No, did he indeed? and how does he like being at home—

Bernick. Oh, we said so little about that.

Mrs. B. Jr. He was only in here for a minute—

Mrs. Bernick Senior. And then Lona Hessel came just after—

Mrs. R. Oh, then she was here too—

Mrs. B. Sr. Yes, and she has changed, to be sure—

[Here is inserted some dialogue to the effect that Johan will stay at home to take over the management of Bernick's ship-yard, etc. Mrs. B. Jr. asks what is to become of poor Aune. Bernick: That is a thing that my little Betty must leave to us men.]
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Mrs. Salvesen. Oh, look, there he is—

Bernick. He? No, not at all, it's— Oh, he, yes— of course—

(R. Rörlund enters.)

Rör. Good morning, good morning, ladies! Good morning, Mr. B.

The Ladies. Good morning—

Mrs. B. Jr. How late you are, Dr. Rörlund.

Rör. Yes, I sincerely ask your pardon, ladies; but I have been in a place where my presence was more necessary than here—

Bernick. You have just come from the harbour, I see—

Rör. Yes, I come from there.

Mrs. B. Jr. And no doubt you had some unpleasantness—?

Rör. Well, it was not exactly pleasant.—Will you just imagine—

Bernick. Excuse me—here is someone I want to speak to—

(During this Aune has come in through the garden-gate. Bernick goes towards him.)

Bernick. You're late, Aune! I've been waiting here for you.

Aune. You must excuse me, sir; but we had to get the American warped in first.

Bernick. And do you think now you can get her repaired at once? [The ship has to be at St. Petersburg in a fortnight—]

Aune. I'd get her repaired all right, if I was allowed to work in my own way.

Bernick. At once—I asked you. In your own way? We can't hear of that. I haven't provided all these expensive machines to let them stand idle, and it won't do for a foreign ship to lie here for months and then perhaps be badly repaired after all.

AUNE. No, no, I dare say that's true.

BERNICK. Listen to me, Aune; I suppose you can guess why I sent for you?

AUNE. Well, it might be several things, I dare say.

BERNICK. Yes, it is several things; but still in a way they are all the same. In the first place—what was that address you gave last Saturday evening at the Workmen's Club?

AUNE. It was about the harm that is done to the workmen by all these new machines——

BERNICK.

II

FROM THE FIRST ACT

AUNE. Mr. Bernick wouldn't have said it like that, Mr. Krap! But I know well enough who it is I've got to thank for this. I can thank you for it, Mr. Krap! You've never been able to forget a certain occasion——

KRAP. Occasion—occasion? I don't know what you're referring to with occasions. But I have told you Mr. Bernick's wishes, and that is enough. Now you had better go down to the yard again; you're sure to be wanted; I shall be down myself presently.—I beg your pardon, ladies!

(He bows, and goes out through the garden and down the street. AUNE goes quietly out to the right. DOCTOR RÖRLUND, who during the foregoing has continued reading, presently closes the book with a bang.)
Rörlund. There, my dear ladies, that is the end.
Mrs. Rummel (drying her eyes). Oh, what a beautiful tale!
Mrs. Holt. And so moral.
Mrs. Bernick Junior. Such a book really gives one a great deal to think over.
Rörlund. Yes, it shows us in what wonderful ways providence sometimes furthers its designs. This little Christian congregation [community] takes refuge in the primeval forests of the far west in order to live in peace and unity as brothers and sisters together. Then worldly-minded speculators come and lay down a railway straight through the quiet region. With intercourse, temptations and corruption find an inlet. But then it is that this convulsion of nature takes place at a far distant spot, and renders it necessary to transfer the railway to quite another line of valley. And as the last locomotive puffs away, the little congregation [community] feels that it is freed from noisy and sinful toil and can now breathe again in peace and sabbath stillness.
Dina. But what happens to the people in the other valley?
Rörlund. My dear child, we must suppose that the other valley was uninhabited.
Mrs. Bernick Senior. H'm; that about the railway reminds me of the danger we were in last year. We only escaped having the railway here by a hair's-breadth. But Karsten managed to put a stop to that.
Rörlund. Providentially, Mrs. Bernick! You may be sure your son was an instrument in a higher hand when he refused to support that scheme.
Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, everything is wonderfully linked together in this world. It is difficult to see the working of it. If we had not you, Dr. Rörlund—!
It is really more than kind of you to sacrifice your leisure time to us.

Rörlund. Oh, not at all—in holiday-time, you know—

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, yes; but it's a sacrifice on your part, nevertheless.

Rörlund (drawing his chair nearer to the ladies). Pray don't speak of it, dear lady. Do not all of you make sacrifices for a good cause? And do you not make them willingly and gladly? That is as it should be. The Lapsed and Lost, for whom we are working, are like wounded soldiers on a battlefield. You, ladies, are the Red Cross Guild, the Sisters of Mercy, who pick lint for these unhappy sufferers, tie the bandages gently round the wounds, dress, and heal them—

Mrs. Bernick Senior. It must be a great blessing to see everything in so beautiful a light.

Rörlund. The gift is largely inborn; but it can in some measure be acquired. Tribulation and affliction are a good school. I am sure that you, Mrs. Bernick, have become aware of a purer and more beautiful light even as your bodily eyes grew dim.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Ah, do not speak of that, Dr. Rörlund! I must confess I am often worldly enough to want to exchange the inner light, if I could recover the outer light instead.

Rörlund. Yes, yes; that is temptation, dear Mrs. Bernick! It is like the railway trains that bring noisy passengers to the little congregation in the far west. But you must bar the door against such an unquiet guest. And, in truth, what have you really lost? Have you not much rather gained a barrier between yourself and the world? Do you not feel secure here, where you form one of the pillars of our little charitable society? Do you really find so much to attract you in the life you hear surging outside? Look at the people in the sweltering sunshine, toiling and moiling over their paltry affairs and paltry sorrows. Ours, surely, is the better part, sitting here in the pleasant shade, and turning our backs toward the quarter from which disturbance might arise.

HILMAR TÖNNESEN. Oh, it is this railway nonsense again.

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. No! is it?

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. Poor Karsten, is he to have all that worry over again?

RÖRLUND. I really thought that affair was dead and buried.

HILMAR. Well, if it wasn't before, it's sure to be to-day.

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Did father say so?

HILMAR. He? Do you think he had any idea of what it was all about? But I met Krap just now and he told me that Bernick had sent to Sandstad, and Rasmussen—"Rasmussen on the hill"—and to Michael Vigel—and "Holy Michael," as they call him—

RÖRLUND. H'm—

HILMAR. I beg your pardon, Doctor!—And then he sent for old Tönnesen. Goodness knows why he should be in it.

MRS. RUMMEL. They are the town council, Mr. Tönnesen.

HILMAR. Old Tönnesen is no longer on the town council.

MRS. HOLT. No, but they are the men who stopped the scheme last year.

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. It was my son who put a stop to it last year, Mrs. Holt! I should think that when anything is to be done or left undone in this town, it depends upon Karsten.

Mrs. Holt. Yes, of course; there is no doubt about that, but——

Hilmar. For that matter, I shouldn’t mind their beginning their twaddle again; it would be a variety at least.

Rörlund. I think we can dispense with that sort of variety.

Hilmar. Well, it depends upon how one takes it.—But here I am smoking. I really beg your pardon, ladies——(Going towards the verandah.)

Mrs. Bernick Senior. By all means smoke; I think it is a very good cigar——

Hilmar. No, it’s a very bad cigar; there isn’t such a thing as a good cigar to be got in the whole town. That’s another of the pleasures of provincial life.—(Turning over the leaves of Rörlund’s book.) “The Forest Community.” What rubbish is this?

Rörlund. The others are not whispering either, it seems to me.

Mrs. Bernick Senior. It must be very annoying for Karsten to have this tiresome affair up again.

Rörlund. Let us hope he will send the schemers about their business, so that they will keep quiet in future.

Mrs. Rummel. Yes, indeed, Mr. Bernick has always been the good spirit of the place——

Mrs. Holt. You may well say that, Mrs. Rummel! Ever since he came home from abroad as a young man——
Mrs. Bernick Senior. Ah, yes, those were disorderly times.

Mrs. Salvesen. Were things really so bad here?

Mrs. Rummel. They were as bad as bad could be, Mrs. Salvesen! You may thank your stars that you didn't live here then; and you too, Dr. Rörlund!

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Yes, what changes I can remember! When I think of the time when I was young——

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, you needn't go back more than twelve or fourteen years. Heavens—what a life it was—! Everything ended in dissipation. There was a dancing club and a music club——

Martha. And the dramatic club—I remember it quite well.

Mrs. Rummel. Yes; it was there your play was acted, Mr. Tönnesen!

Hilmar (at the back). Oh, nonsense——!

Rörlund. Mr. Tönnesen's play?

Mrs. Salvesen. Wasn't it in that play you told me you played the heroine, Mrs. Rummel?

Mrs. Rummel (glancing at Rörlund). I? I really don't remember, Mrs. Salvesen. But I remember too well all the noisy gaiety that went on among families.

Mrs. Holt. Yes; I actually know houses where there were two great dinner-parties in one week.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. And in the summer, when the foreign officers were here with the training-ship——

Mrs. Holt. Ugh, the horrid officers!

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Then we had picnic-parties both on sea and land——

Mrs. Holt. You see, Madam Dorf was one of Möller's company——
Mrs. Rummel. And one evening Dorf came home very late—

Mrs. Holt. —and quite unexpectedly—

Mrs. Rummel. And there he found—no, really, I don't think I can tell you.

Mrs. Holt. But—only think!—young Tönnesen had to jump out of the window!

Mrs. Rummel. Yes, and it was an attic window too! And that was why he ran away to America.

Mrs. Salvesen. Oh, no! how unfortunate that I knew nothing—

Mrs. Holt. Well, now you can see how careful we have to be. Poor Dina can't help her mother being a person like that. She was then a child of six or seven—

Rörlund. Oh, you cannot possibly realise the thousand considerations—. When a man is singled out as a pillar of the society he lives in—. Sh! here they come.

(She looks at him for a moment, then goes out to the verandah; Rörlund also goes towards the back. At the same moment Old Tönnesen comes noisily out of Mr. Bernick's room.)

Mads Tönnesen (in the doorway). No, no, no, I say! Never while I'm alive, I say! I'm off now, as sure as my name's Mads Tönnesen! (Slams the door.)

Hilmar (at the same time, to Mrs. Bernick Junior). There he is. Good-bye! (Is hurrying off to the right.)

Mads Tönnesen. Hilmar! My son Hilmar, wait, we'll go together. Now we shall see signs and wonders. Hilmar! I'm damned if I ever heard anything so mad!

Hilmar. Hush; don't swear so horribly. Can't you see who is sitting out there?
MADS. What, is the old lady there? (Approaching.)
Good morning, ma'am!

HILMAR. Come on; come on!

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. Good morning, Tönnesen.
Well, is it all over?

MADS. Yes, it'll soon be all over with the whole of us. I never heard anything so unreasonable. Now he wants to build the railway after all!

RÖRLUND. What do you say?

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. Who?

MADS. Your son, of course!

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. But, my dear father——?

THE THREE LADIES. No, can it be possible——!

MADS. No, it's quite impossible! It won't come off;
for he wants to build it with our money——

RÖRLUND. But this is quite contrary to what Mr.
Bernick last year——

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. Your father must be mistaken, Betty.

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Yes, I can't suppose anything else.

(SANDSTAD, RASMUSSEN [RUMMEL] and VIGELAND enter from the room on the left, followed by BERNICK, who has a bundle of papers in his hand.)

BERNICK. Well, gentlemen, I shall not regard this as a final refusal. At any rate take the papers home with you and try to make yourselves better acquainted with my calculations.

SANDSTAD. I'm a plain-spoken man, Mr. Bernick, and I say the same this year as I said last——

BERNICK. But the case is not the same this year as last.
Rasmussen. No, it is not—

Sandstad. Well, be that as it may, I cannot advise private individuals to venture their money in this; and still less can I be a party to voting any public funds.

Rasmussen. Nor I either.

Vigeland. And then I am afraid it will lead us into worldliness, Mr. Bernick! The minds of all serious people are now intent upon the building of the new meeting-house. And we must think of spiritual needs before all else.

Bernick. Of course, of course, Mr. Vigeland; but—

Sandstad. Yes, you've chosen your time as unfortunately as you could have, Mr. Bernick! Excuse my plain-speaking: but just think of the severe storm we had in the North Sea last week. Nobody can tell how heavy the losses of the town may be; damaged ships are putting in here every day—

Rasmussen. Yes, it was a severe storm.—

Bernick. All that is admitted; but you know that the main line is under construction, and unless we are quick in arriving at a decision now, it will be too late; we shall not be able afterwards to get a branch line brought here. You must bear that in mind, gentlemen.

Sandstad. Well, then we shall have to do without.

Bernick. And you are really prepared to take such a moral responsibility upon yourselves? Are our great tracts of forest to remain inaccessible? Remember all the rich mineral-seams it would allow us to work! Think of our water-power, with one waterfall above another! What rare advantages for manufactures of all kinds!

Rasmussen. Yes, there are.

Vigeland. But all this would benefit the inland districts more than the town, Mr. Bernick!
struck me like a flash of lightning! I went up there; and what did I find? Just as they told me—the whole Trangdal ravine lying dry as a high-road—the Trangdal ravine, you understand, which had been the vital natural obstruction to the branch line—

Rörlund. That was indeed most remarkable.

Bernick. It was more than remarkable, Doctor! I arrived there one Sunday morning, and as in an instant my eyes were thus opened to the immense bearing of this occurrence, a feeling almost of devotion came upon me. This convulsion of nature just at the eleventh hour—; was it not evident that providence itself had intervened?

Rörlund. Ah, it is so difficult to pronounce upon—

Bernick. I am, I regret to say, not a remarkably religious man; but still I have at times my deeper moments and that moment was one of them. I saw before me the thousand happy homes which might be created in this wilderness; I saw our town, which hitherto has been almost isolated on the land side, suddenly brought into communication with flourishing inland districts. Life, prosperity, progress on all sides! You will see, you will not be able to recognise the place after the first railway train has rolled in. Am I not right?

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Yes, Karsten, indeed you are!

Mrs. Bernick Junior. And you have kept all this secret!

Bernick. Oh, my dear, you would not have been able to see—; one ought never to speak of business matters before the decisive moment. But now I have the engineers' report—all the estimates;—now we have only to get the necessary contribution subscribed. And that must and shall be done! Ay, if I have to risk all I possess in the affair, I am determined to see it through!

Mrs. Bernick Senior. You are a man, Karsten!
Mrs. Rummel. Yes, we were just saying that you were like a good spirit to the town [were the good spirit of the town, Mr. Bernick].

Mrs. Holt. Only think, if we should have a railway here!

Netta [Dina]. Then we should be able to go by train on Sundays!

Rörlund. On Sundays?

Mrs. Rummel. Dina means on week-days, no doubt.

Mrs. Salvesen. Do you think butter will be cheaper if we have a railway, Mr. Bernick?

Bernick. The railway will bring prosperity to the whole community; that is all I can tell you for the moment. But that is just what we all have to work for. Don't you agree with me, Dr. Rörlund?

Rörlund. H'm; I am not a man of business, Mr. Bernick; and the restricted community to which I belong——

Bernick. It will suffer no injury from the railway, I can assure you of that! Our busy little town is built, heaven be thanked, on a sound moral foundation. We men will ward off the shock, and our wives and daughters will continue to occupy the place that nature has assigned them. Believe me, the purity of our homes is not so easily disturbed, if only our women remain what they ought to be. Proceed unwearied in your charitable labours, ladies, and be a support and comfort to those nearest and dearest to you, as my dear Betty and my dear old mother are to me and Olaf——(Looks around.) Why, where is Olaf to-day?

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Oh, in the holidays it's impossible to keep him at home.

Bernick. Then he's certain to have gone down to the water again. You'll see, this will end in a misfortune.

(Krap enters from the right.)
Krap. A ship for repairs, Mr. Bernick.

Bernick. Oh? Is she owned here?

Krap. No, a big American; sprang a leak in the North Sea—

Bernick. Bravo! But, I say—(coming forward with Krap). Can we take her in?

Krap. Don't know what to say. Things are going badly at the yard, Mr. Bernick. To-day, drilling-machine out of order again. Steam-plane won't work either.

Bernick. H'm, h'm; I don't believe Aune will ever learn to work with machines.

Krap. Doesn't want to learn; has set himself against the machines ever since we put them in.

Bernick. Oh, we shall be able to get over that. But under any circumstances—we mustn't lose the American. What kind of ship is she?

Krap. The barque Indian Girl of New York. Bound from Brazil to Glasgow with dye-wood; driven out of her course towards Jutland;—boisterous weather, Mr. Bernick!

Bernick. And the captain?

Krap. Captain went overboard—drunk. The mate's in his bunk—with delirium tremens. A passenger took command—a sailor. She was towed in just now by the Hamburg steamer.

Bernick. Is the Hamburg steamer in already?

Krap. Just this moment. Here is the American's card.

Bernick (reads). "Captain John Tennyson. New Orleans." Then he's from the Southern States. Well, you must see that you give him all the help you can, Mr. Krap.

Krap. I'll do so, Mr. Bernick.
Bernick. And, look here—one other thing: do you know whether Mr. Busk, the lawyer, has come back?

Krap. Not yet. (He goes out to the right.)

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Yes, is it not like ghosts of old days? Listen, now they’re singing. How it fills the air. How it sounds over our quiet town——

Rörlund. And just at dinner-time too! While grace is being said in every quiet home. Look, look, serious men are running to the windows with their napkins under their chins——

Olaf (in the garden). Mamma, now the Americans are shouting hurrah outside grandpapa’s!

Rörlund. Hurrah? Yes, it is true! So this is the prodigal son’s return. Not with contrition; not with the tears of repentance, but with impudent bawling, with ribald songs—! My dear friends, we ought not to witness this. Let us go back to our work!

Mrs. Bernick Junior. Yes, come, come!

(All the ladies go into the front room and take their places at the table.)

Rörlund (shutting the garden door). There; a barrier between us and frivolity——

Mrs. Rummel. Don’t look out, Hilda!

Mrs. Holt. Nor you either, Netta!

Rörlund. —and a veil before indecorousness——

(He draws the curtains so that the room becomes half dark.)

Bernick. You are giving yourself too much trouble, Doctor! We are so much accustomed to the disturbances of foreign sailors——

Rörlund. Foreigners—yes, that is another thing. But he who has now suddenly reappeared among us, and who announces his return in so significant a way—; well, in an ordinary house I would not express myself so openly, but I know that within these walls considerations are entertained which outweigh a casual relationship—

BERNICK. Well, well, well, don't be alarmed;—our little society has its pillars, Dr. Rörlund!

RÖRLUND. Pillars that have stood the test, Mr. Bernick! I know it, I know it. Once before you put a stop to excesses here—

(The door on the right is thrown open and LONA HESSEL enters quickly.)

LONA. No, I couldn't wait any longer! Here I am, dear friends!

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Lona!

MRS. BERNICK SENIOR. Lona—my dear girl!

MRS. HOLT and MRS. RUMMEL. Miss Hessel!

LONA. Yes, but don't look at me; for the big wash didn't come off. As soon as I heard who the American was—; but you don't know, it seems?

MRS. BERNICK JUNIOR. Ah, we do, unfortunately!

LONA. Unfortunately? Has anything gone wrong? You are sitting here in this twilight? And sewing at something white? There hasn't been a death in the family?

RÖRLUND. This is a meeting, Miss Hessel, of the Society for the Moral Regeneration of the Lapsed and Lost.

LONA. What? These nice-looking, well-behaved ladies, can they be—?

MRS. RUMMEL. Oh, this is too much—!

LONA. Ah, I see, I see! But look here, the Lapsed and Lost will have to wait for one day; they'll be none the worse for it; on a joyful occasion like this—
Rörlund. A joyful occasion? Don’t you know that old Tönnesen’s prodigal son has returned?

Lona. Is the prodigal son to be received with long faces? How do you read your Bible, Pastor?

Rörlund. I am not a clergyman.

Lona. Oh; then you will be one, for certain.—But, pah!—all this linen smells like a shroud. Come and help me, Cousin Karsten; we must have the doors and windows open.

Mrs. Bernick Junior. But, Lona, what are you doing——?

Rörlund. But, Mr. Bernick——?

Bernick. Yes, excuse me; it is really rather oppressive in here.

Lona (drawing up the Venetian blinds). And then broad daylight. So! Now we are out of the sepulchral vault. Look, look; the whole town is on its feet! And listen, how they play and sing in the sunshine, these foreigners! They are real human beings—full of sun like southern fruits. Oh, my dear aunt, what a pity it is that with your bad eyes you can’t see all this beautiful life——

Mrs. Bernick Senior. Tell me about it, my dear girl, then I shall see it.

Rörlund (picking up his book, hat and gloves). I do not think, ladies, that we are quite in the mood for doing more work to-day; but we shall meet again to-morrow.

Lona (as the visitors rise to go). Yes, by all means—I shall be here.

Rörlund. You? Allow me to ask, Miss Hessel, what you will do in our Society?

Lona. Open all the doors and windows wide, Pastor!
Dina, you will.

DINA. I am your wife from this hour.

JOHAN. Oh, say that once more.

DINA. Your wife.

JOHAN. And all that lies—that you think lies behind us—

DINA. I know nothing about it; I only know that I must love you——

JOHAN. Then I'll burn my boats—this community of hypocrites shall never see us again.

LONA. On board—on board—Johan——

JOHAN. Yes, on board—Ah, but—Lona—my dear—come here—(he leads her up to the back and talks rapidly to her).

MARTHA. Dina—happy girl! Let me look at you and kiss you once more—for the last time.

DINA. Not the last time; no, my dear, dear aunt—we shall meet again.

MARTHA. Never! Promise me, Dina, never to come back again. What are you doing here? This is no place for you; here they deprive one of the courage to wish to be happy——

DINA. Oh, now I have courage enough for anything; now I defy them all.

MARTHA. Yes, out there in the great free world, when you are alone with him, without all these terrifying considerations, without the oppression of all this deadly respectability——

DINA. Yes, yes; that is it!
Martha. My dear child! Now go to your happiness—over the sea. Oh, how often have I sat in the school-room and longed to be over there. It must be beautiful there; the heaven is wider; the clouds sail higher than here; a purer air sweeps over the heads of the people—

Dina. Oh, Aunt Martha,—why do you not come with us?

Martha. I? Never! Now my position is fixed. Heaven be praised that I was able to see clearly; now I think I can give myself wholly to what I have to do.

Dina. I cannot imagine being parted from you.

Martha. Ah, one can part from so much, Dina. (Kisses her.) But you will not have to learn that lesson, my dear child! Promise me to make him happy.

Dina. Promise? I know of nothing to promise, will promise nothing—here I have learnt to hate the very word promise.

Martha. You shan't promise anything either; you have to remain as you are, true and faithful to yourself.

Dina. That I will, Aunt Martha; for I must remain so.

Martha. Yes, yes, yes; I know that well enough.

Lona (to Johan). Good, good, my dear boy; that's the way. And now on board!

Johan. Yes, there's no time to be lost. Good-bye, Lona! thanks, thanks for all you have been to me. Good-bye, Martha; thanks to you too. Be happy; the single state, you see—

Martha. Oh, that that should be your last word! No, no, no; but go; good-bye, Johan; good-bye, Dina—and happiness be over all your days!

(She and Lona hurry them towards the door in the background; hand-shakings and farewells; Johan and Dina go quickly out; Lona shuts the door after them.)
Lona. Now we are alone, Martha. You have lost her and I him.

Martha. You—him?

Martha. That is true, sometimes.

Lona. Now we two must hold together, Martha.

Martha. Can I be anything to you?

Lona. Who more? We two foster-mothers. Have we not both lost our children? Now we are alone.

Martha. Yes, alone. So now I will tell you this; I have loved him more than you.

Lona. Martha!—Is this the truth?

Martha. My whole life lies in the words. I have loved him, and waited for him. And then he came; but he did not see me.

Lona. Loved him! And it was you that with such self-sacrifice gave his happiness into his hands.

Martha. How could I love him, if I were not willing to give him his happiness? Yes, I have loved him; I have lived my whole life for him, ever since he went away. Oh, it was really a happy life, though a life of longing and impatience——

Lona. And you call yourself impatient who have waited all these years?

Martha. Yes, that was the misfortune, that I did not notice how the years were going by. When he went away we were of the same age; and when I saw him again—Oh, that horrible moment—I realised that I was ten years older than he. He had lived out there in the bright, quivering sunshine, and drunk in health at every breath; and here sat I the while, spinning and spinning——
LONA. —the thread of his happiness, Martha.

MARThA. Yes, it was gold I spun. No bitterness; the problem is not how to be happy, but how to deserve happiness.

LONA. That is true, Martha—would that certain others thought the same.

BERNICK (speaking off). Yes, yes, settle it as you please; when the time comes, I shall be ready—(Shuts the door.) Oh, are you there? Now, Martha, you might as well look to your dress a little; and tell Betty to do the same. Nothing out of the way, of course; just a certain note of festivity—but be quick——

LONA. And you must look bright and happy, Martha; your brother forgot that.

MARThA. I will tell Betty.

(She goes out by the second door on the left.)

LONA. Well, so the great and solemn hour has come.

BERNICK. Yes, it has come.

LONA. Now you must feel proud and happy, no doubt.

BERNICK (looks at her). H'm!

LONA. The whole town is to be illuminated, I hear.

BERNICK. Yes, I believe there is some such idea.

LONA. All the guilds will turn out with their banners; Hilmar has written a song and Pastor Rörlund is going to make a speech. To-night it will be telegraphed to every corner of the country—"Surrounded by his happy family, Consul Bernick received the homage of his fellow citizens as one of the chief pillars of society——"

BERNICK. So it will; and the crowd in the street will shout and hurrah, and insist on my coming forward to the window—and I shall have to bow and thank them——

LONA. Have to—? that's hardly the right expression.
Bernoick. Do you think I feel happy at this moment?

Lona. No, I do not think that you can feel altogether happy.

Bernoick (after a pause). Lona, you despise me.

Lona. Not yet.

Bernoick. And you have no right to. And yet—yes, yes, after all, there are times when I despise myself. But you cannot conceive how unspeakably alone I stand, here in this narrow, hypocritical society—you cannot conceive how, year by year, I have had to put a tighter curb on my ambition for a full and satisfying life-work. What have I accomplished, for all the show it makes?—scrap-work, odds and ends—there is no room here for other and larger work. If I tried to go a step in advance of the views and ideas of the day, all my influence was gone. Do you know what we are, we, who are reckoned the pillars of society? We are the slaves of society, neither more nor less.

Lona. And why do you only see this now?

Bernoick. Do you think there have not been moments, when this has been uppermost in me? But then the lukewarm currents of everyday life came over me again. And so lonely as I was! Lona—why did I not know you through and through then?

Lona. What then?

Bernoick. I should never have given you up; and, with you by my side, I should not have stood where I stand now.

Lona. And are you so certain of what she might have been to you, she, whom you chose in my stead?

Bernoick. I know, at any rate, that she has not been anything that I required. You will say that the fault is mine—but how does that help? And yet she might have met me, might have shared my interests, might now and then have thrown upon me a ray of that disconnected, spasmodic way of looking at things, which a man cannot exactly make use of in his work, but which nevertheless has an inspiring and purifying effect on his whole course of conduct. It is this power that the women among us are not allowed to exercise; most of them do not even possess it; Lona—not one in a thousand has the courage to be like you——

LONA. That is to say—to be herself.

BERNICK. Yes, and to be what a man most profoundly needs. That is why I never felt satisfaction when fortune was with me, never felt the stimulating increase of strength which may result from adversity; my whole life has been a series of petty annoyances or petty, stale triumphs—like the one we are going to have now——

LONA. This too?

BERNICK. I have not sunk so low that empty glitter can smother what I have to say to myself in secret.

LONA. Then why not break with all this hollowness?

BERNICK. You don’t understand. You don’t know the inner force that drives a man to work and accomplish something in this world. It is different with you women; you must have something to love, a cat or a dog or a canary, if you have nothing else. You think I am working for my own profit, but that is not so; what I have done has brought me profit, it is true, but it is not for that I have been working—I have wanted to be the first—but I know that this is also to the advantage of society.

LONA. And yourself? What satisfaction does this give you?

BERNICK. None; the whole of this generation of shams must go under. But a new generation will grow up after us; it is my son that I am working for; it is for him I am preparing a foundation; there will come a time when truth will make its way into our social order, and upon it he shall found a happier life than his father's—

LONA. With a lie for its groundwork? Think what it is you are giving him for an inheritance—

* Here a couple of lines have been omitted in copying Ibsen's MS. In the published play they read:—

BERNICK (with suppressed despair). I am giving him an inheritance a thousand times worse than you know of. But, sooner or later,— the curse must pass away. I have gone a hundred times further than you suspect, but good can turn to evil, and so too can evil--; why did you come here? I shall not give way; cannot give way; you shall not succeed in crushing me—

HILMAR (enters quickly from the right). Why, this is—Betty, Betty!

BERNICK. What now? Are they coming already?

HILMAR. No, certainly not; but I must speak to some one at once—

LONA. Bernick, you say we came to crush you. Then let me tell you what he is, this prodigal son whom your moral society shrinks from as if he were plague-stricken. He can do without you all; he has gone away.

BERNICK. But he will come back.

LONA. He will never come back; and you know nothing. He has gone for ever, and Dina with him.

BERNICK. Gone? And Dina with him?

LONA. Yes, as his wife, without clergy or wedding; that is how he strikes your society in the face, as I once—
No matter!

BERNICK. Gone; she too in the Indian Girl—

LONA. No; he dared not entrust such a precious freight to those scoundrels; he has sailed in the Olive Leaf—

BERNICK. Ah; then it was—to no purpose—(calls into his room) Krap—stop the Indian Girl—she mustn’t sail to-night—

KRAP (inside). The Indian Girl is already standing out to sea, Consul.

BERNICK. Too late—and all for nothing.

LONA. What do you mean?—

BERNICK. Nothing, nothing—leave me alone, you spirit of vengeance.

LONA. H’m! Listen, Bernick; Johan told me to tell you that he makes you a present of the good name he once lent you; see, I hold in my hand your letters—

BERNICK. You have them! And now—now you will—this very night perhaps—when the procession—

LONA. How far you are from knowing me through and through, Karsten—see—I tear your letters to shreds; now, there is nothing to bear witness against you—except your own conscience; now you are safe—be happy too—if you can—

BERNICK. Lona—why did you not do this before; it is too late now—you have spoilt my whole life now—I cannot live after to-day—

LONA. What has happened?

BERNICK. Don’t ask me! Not live! Yes, I will—live, live—work—I have bought it dearly enough.

LONA. Karsten!

HILMAR (enters hurriedly from the left) No one to be found; all away! not even Betty!
BERNICK. What is it?
HILMAR. I can’t tell you——
BERNICK. Speak, I tell you——
HILMAR. Well then—Olaf has run away in the Indian Girl.
BERNICK. Run away—and in the Indian Girl—no, no——
LONA. Ah, yes—now I understand—he went through here a little while ago and—— BERNICK (at the door on the left). Krap—stop the Indian Girl at any cost!
KRAP. Impossible, Consul—she’s already at sea——
BERNICK. And my son is on board.
KRAP. What?
RUMMEL. Run away; impossible——
SANDSTAD. They’ll send him back.
HILMAR. No, no, he writes that he’ll hide among the cargo until they are fairly out to sea.
BERNICK. I shall never see him again.
RUMMEL. Oh, nonsense; a good stout ship, newly repaired——
VIGELAND. —and in your own yard, too, Consul——
BERNICK. I shall never see him again, I tell you.—
(Listens.) What is that?
RUMMEL. Music. The procession is coming.
BERNICK. I cannot, I will not see any one.
RUMMEL. What are you thinking of? It’s impossible.
SANDSTAD. Impossible, Consul—the scheme is not yet firmly established—think how much you have at stake.
BERNICK. What does it all matter to me now? Whom have I now to work for?
LONA. Society, brother-in-law, society.
Rummel. Yes, very true.
Sandstad. And us others; you won't forget, Consul, that—Martha (from the left). Here they come; but Betty is not at home—
Bernick. Not at home? There, you see, Lona; on an evening like this; no support either in joy or sorrow—
Rummel. Up with the curtains; more candles; up with all the curtains; help me, Mr. Sandstad!

Bernick. And now to come to the chief point in my settlement with society and with my conscience. Betty, collect yourself to bear what is coming.—It has been said that elements of evil have left us this evening—; I can add what you do not know; the man thus alluded to did not go alone—with him went, as his wife—
Lona. Dina Dorf!
Rörlund. What? (Great sensation among the crowd.)
Rörlund. Fled?—run away, impossible!
Bernick. As his wife, without either clergyman or wedding ceremony, and yet I tell you that I regard this marriage as higher than many another among us, in which all forms have been observed—and I will add more—honour to that man, for he has nobly taken upon himself another's sin—my fellow citizens, I will get clear of the lie—you shall know all—fifteen years ago, it was I who sinned—
Mrs. Bernick. Oh, Karsten, thanks, thanks.
Lona. At last you have found your true self!
(Astonished whispering among the crowd.)
Bernick. There; now we are on a fair footing with each other; now we shall see whether fifteen years' activity can wipe out a youthful aberration—let him who knows himself to be pure cast the first stone; but do not decide this evening; I ask every one of you to go home—to collect himself—away with all this show!—you will feel that it is out of place here—

Rörlund. Assuredly it is—well, I thank God—it would have been a sacrifice in vain—Yes, gentlemen, I think we had better——

(The announcement is whispered from mouth to mouth; the crowd retires noiselessly.)

Bernick. Betty, this was a heavy blow for you.

Mrs. Bernick. This is the happiest occasion for fifteen years.

Bernick. How so? Did you——?

Mrs. Bernick. I knew all.

Bernick. Knew——?

Mrs. Bernick. The evening before our wedding-day. That was her revenge.

Bernick. Knew—and yet said nothing?

Mrs. Bernick. Oh, why have you been silent, Karsten? Why have you never thought me worthy of forgiving a moment of aberration?

Bernick. Because I have never known you until this evening. But now let him come!

Mrs. Bernick. Yes, yes; you shall have him.—Mr. Krap—(whispers to him in the background; he goes out by the garden door).

Bernick. Thanks, Lona; you have saved what is best in me.

Lona. What else did I intend?

Bernick. How then? not hatred;—not revenge?

Lona. Old love does not rust.

Bernick. Lona!

Lona. Mona!
BERNICK. Oh, how little has a pitiful coward like me deserved—

LONA. Yes, if we women always asked for deserts,

Karsten— (AUNE and OLAF enter from the garden.)

BERNICK. Olaf!

OLAF. Father, I'll never—

BERNICK. Never do it again? Yes, you shall—but not secretly—listen, boy—In future you shall be allowed to be yourself—

OLAF. Not a pillar of society?

BERNICK. No, no; yourself, do you hear? whatever may happen. And you, Aune—

AUNE. I know it, Consul—I am dismissed—

BERNICK. We will not part company, Aune--; forgive me—

AUNE. What? the ship can't get away.

BERNICK. Heaven be thanked for that; and—forgive me—to-morrow she must be overhauled—perhaps fresh repairs may be necessary—

AUNE. Perhaps.

BERNICK. Yes, yes, there is much here that needs overhauling. Good-night, Aune!

AUNE. Good-night, Consul—and thank you heartily.

(Goes out to the right.)

MRS. BERNICK. Now they are all gone.

BERNICK. And we are alone. All the lights are out in the windows—

MRS. BERNICK. Would you have them lighted again?

BERNICK. Not for all the world. Oh, come nearer, closer around me—I have grown young again! Come, Betty—come, Olaf—and you, Martha—it seems as though I had never seen you during all these years—our society is a society of bachelor-souls—we have no eyes for womanhood—and you, Lona—it is settled, is it not?—you won't leave us——

Lona. No; how could I think of going away and leaving you young people, just beginning life? Am I not your foster mother? You and I, Martha, we are the two old aunts—what are you looking at?

Martha. How the sky is clearing—; how the clouds are lifting—the Olive Leaf has fortune with it.

Lona. And happiness on board——

Bernick. And we, we have a long, earnest day of work before us—I most of all—but let it come—gather close around me, you strong and true women—one thing I have learnt to-day: it is you women who are the pillars of society——

Lona. Then you have learnt a poor wisdom, brother-in-law. (Grasps his hand.)—the spirits of Truth and Freedom—these are the Pillars of Society.
A DOLL'S HOUSE
NOTES FOR THE MODERN TRAGEDY

Rome, 19. 10, '78.

There are two kinds of spiritual law, two kinds of conscience, one in man and another, altogether different, in woman. They do not understand each other; but in practical life the woman is judged by man's law, as though she were not a woman but a man.

The wife in the play ends by having no idea of what is right or wrong; natural feeling on the one hand and belief in authority on the other have altogether bewildered her.

A woman cannot be herself in the society of the present day, which is an exclusively masculine society, with laws framed by men and with a judicial system that judges feminine conduct from a masculine point of view.

She has committed forgery, and she is proud of it; for she did it out of love for her husband, to save his life. But this husband with his commonplace principles of honour is on the side of the law and regards the question with masculine eyes.

Spiritual conflicts. Oppressed and bewildered by the belief in authority, she loses faith in her moral right and ability to bring up her children. Bitterness. A mother in modern society, like certain insects who go away and die when she has done her duty in the propagation of the race.² Love of life, of home, of husband and children and family. Here and there a womanly shaking-off of her thoughts. Sudden return of anxiety and terror. She must bear it all alone. The catastrophe approaches, inexorably, inevitably. Despair, conflict and destruction. (Krogstad has acted dishonourably and thereby become well-to-do; now his prosperity does not help him, he cannot recover his honour.)

PERSONS

Stenborg, a Government clerk.
Nora, his wife.
Miss (Mrs.) Lind (a widow).
Attorney Krogstad.
Karen, nurse at the Stenborgs'.
A Parlour-Maid at the Stenborgs'.
A Porter.
The Stenborgs' three little children.
Doctor Hank.

SCENARIO

First Act

A room comfortably, but not showily, furnished. In the back, on the right, a door leads to the hall; on the left another door leads to the room or office of the master of the house, which can be seen when the door is opened. A fire in the stove. Winter day.

She enters from the back, humming gaily; she is in outdoor dress and carries several parcels, has been shopping. As she opens the door, a Porter is seen in the hall, carrying a Christmas-tree. She: Put it down there for the present. (Taking out her purse) How much? Porter: Fifty öre. She: Here is a crown. No, keep the change. The Porter thanks her and goes. She continues humming and smiling with quiet glee as she opens several of the parcels she has brought. Calls off, is he at home? Yes! At first, conversation through the closed door; then he opens it and goes on talking to her while continuing to work most of the time, standing at his desk. There is a ring at the hall-door; he does not want to be disturbed; shuts himself in. The maid opens the door to her mistress’s friend, just arrived in town. Happy surprise. Mutual explanation of the position of affairs. He has received the post of manager in the new joint-stock bank and is to enter on his duties at the New Year; all financial worries are at an end. The friend has come to town to look for some small employment in an office or whatever may present itself. Mrs. Stenborg gives her good hopes, is certain that all will turn out well. The maid opens the front-door to the debt-collector. Mrs. Stenborg terrified; they exchange a few words; he is shown into the office. Mrs. Stenborg and her friend; the circumstances of the debt-collector are touched upon. Stenborg enters in his overcoat; has sent the collector out the other way. Conversation about the friend’s affairs; hesitation on his part. He and the friend go out; his wife follows them into the hall; the Nurse enters with the children. Mother and children play. The collector enters. Mrs. Stenborg sends the children out to the left. Great scene between her and him. He goes. Stenborg enters; has met him on the stairs; displeased; wants to know what he came back for? Her support? No intrigues. His wife cautiously tries to pump him. Strict legal answers. Exit to his room. She (repeating her words when the collector went out) But that’s impossible. Why, I did it from love!
SCENARIO

SECOND ACT

The last day of the year. Midday. Nora and the old Nurse. Nora, impelled by uneasiness, is putting on her things to go out. Anxious random questions of one kind and another give a hint that thoughts of death are in her mind. Tries to banish these thoughts, to turn it off, hopes that something or other may intervene. But what? The Nurse goes off to the left.—Stenborg enters from his room. Short dialogue between him and Nora. —The Nurse re-enters, looking for Nora; the youngest child is crying. Annoyance and questioning on Stenborg’s part; exit the Nurse; Stenborg is going in to the children.—Doctor Hank enters. Scene between him and Stenborg.—Nora soon re-enters; she has turned back; anxiety has driven her home again. Scene between her, the Doctor and Stenborg. Stenborg goes into his room.—Scene between Nora and the Doctor. The Doctor goes out.—Nora alone.—Mrs. Linde enters. Scene between her and Nora.—Krogstad enters. Short scene between him, Mrs. Linde and Nora. Mrs. Linde goes in to the children.—Scene between Krogstad and Nora.—she entreats and implores him for the sake of her little children; in vain. Krogstad goes out. The letter is seen to fall from outside into the letter-box.—Mrs. Linde re-enters after a short pause. Scene between her and Nora. Half confession. Mrs. Linde goes out.—Nora alone.—Stenborg enters. Scene between him and Nora. He wants to empty the letter-box. Entreaties, jests, half playful persuasion. He promises to let business wait till after New Year’s Day; but at 12 o’clock midnight—! Exit. Nora alone. Nora (looking at the clock:) It is five o'clock. Five;—seven hours till midnight. Twenty-four hours till the next midnight. Twenty-four and seven—thirty-one. Thirty-one hours to live.—

Third Act

(A muffled sound of dance music is heard from the floor above. A lighted lamp on the table. Mrs. Linde sits in an armchair and absently turns the pages of a book, tries to read, but seems unable to fix her attention; once or twice she looks at her watch. Nora comes down from the dance; uneasiness has driven her; surprise at finding Mrs. Linde, who pretends that she wanted to see Nora in her costume. Helmer, displeased at her going away, comes to fetch her back. The Doctor also enters, but to say good-bye. Meanwhile Mrs. Linde has gone into the side room on the right. Scene between the Doctor, Helmer and Nora. He is going to bed, he says, never to get up again; they are not to come and see him; there is ugliness about a death-bed. He goes out. Helmer goes upstairs again with Nora, after the latter has exchanged a few words of farewell with Mrs. Linde. Mrs. Linde alone. Then Krogstad. Scene and explanation between them. Both go out. Nora and the children. Then she alone. Then Helmer. He takes the letters out of the letter-box. Short scene; good-night; he goes into his room. Nora in despair prepares for the final step; is already at the door when Helmer enters with the open letter in his hand. Great scene. A ring. Letter to Nora from Krogstad. Final scene. Divorce. Nora leaves the house.—
I

(A bell rings in the hall outside. Presently the outer door of the flat is heard to open. Then Mrs. Stenborg enters, humming gaily. She is in outdoor dress, and carries several parcels, which she lays on a chair on the right. As she opens the door, a Porter is seen in the hall, carrying a Christmas-tree and a basket, which he gives to the Maid-servant who has opened the door.)

Mrs. Stenborg (to the Maid). Hide the Christmas-tree carefully, Christina; the children must on no account see it before to-morrow. (To the Porter, taking out her purse.) How much?

Porter. Fifty öre.

Mrs. Stenborg. There is a crown. No, keep the change.

(The Porter thanks her and goes. Mrs. Stenborg shuts the door. She continues humming and smiling in quiet glee as she takes off her outdoor things.)

Mrs. Stenborg (listening at her husband's door). Yes; he is at home. (Begins humming again.)
Stenborg (within). Is that my lark twittering there?
Mrs. Stenborg (busy opening some of her parcels).
Yes, it is.
Stenborg. Is it the squirrel frisking around?
Mrs. Stenborg. Yes.
Stenborg. When did the squirrel get home?
Mrs. Stenborg. Just this minute. Come here, Thorvald, and see what I’ve been buying.
Stenborg. Don’t interrupt me. (A little later he opens the door and looks in, pen in hand.) Buying, did you say? What! All that? Has my little spendthrift been making the money fly again?
Mrs. Stenborg. Why, Thorvald, surely we can afford to launch out a little now. It’s the first Christmas we haven’t had to pinch.
Stenborg. Come, come; we can’t afford to squander money.
Mrs. Stenborg. Oh yes, Thorvald, do let us squander a little now! You know you’ll soon be earning heaps of money.
Stenborg. Yes, from New Year’s Day. But there’s a whole quarter before my first salary is due.
Mrs. Stenborg. Never mind; we can borrow in the meantime.
Stenborg. Nora! (He enters the room.) You know my principles on these points. No debts! No borrowing! That must be understood between us. (He puts his arm round her.) It’s a sweet little lark, but it gets through a lot of money. No one would believe how much it costs a man to keep such a little bird as you.
Mrs. Stenborg. For shame! How can you say so? Why, I save as much as ever I can.
Stenborg (laughing). Very true—as much as you can—but that’s precisely nothing.
MRS. STENBORG (hums and smiles with covert glee). H'm! If you only knew, Thorvald, what expenses we larks and squirrels have!

STENBORG. You're a strange little being, Nora! Sitting here often and often till late at night, slaving away at your copyist's work, to earn the few crowns you can get for it; and then—at the same time—the money often seems to slip through your fingers, without your knowing what becomes of it. But that's going to come to an end, Nora. The copying, I mean. That sort of thing is not good for merry little larks; and now there is no need of it either.

MRS. STENBORG (clapping her hands). No, there isn't, Thorvald, is there? Oh, how delightful it is to think of! (Takes his arm.) And now I'll tell you how I think we ought to manage, Thorvald. As soon as Christmas is over— (The hall-door bell rings.) Ouf, there's a ring! That's somebody come to call. How tiresome!

STENBORG. I'm "not at home" to callers; remember that. (He goes into his study and shuts the door.)

(MRS. STENBORG arranges the room. The Maid-servant opens the door to the hall.)

MAID-SERVANT. A lady to see you, ma'am.

MRS. STENBORG. Please come in.

(MISS [MRS.] LIND, in travelling costume, comes into the room. The Maid shuts the door.)

[(The bell rings again. Brief exchange of words with the Doctor.)]

MISS [MRS.] LIND (embarrassed and hesitating). How do you do, Nora?

MRS. STENBORG. How do you do?

MISS [MRS.] LIND. I see you don't recognise me.
MRS. STENBORG. No—oh yes!—I believe— (Suddenly brightening.) What, Christina! Is it really you?

MISS LIND. Yes; really I!

MRS. STENBORG. Christina! And to think I didn’t know you! But how could I— How changed you are, Christina!

MISS LIND. Yes, no doubt. In eight long years——

MRS. STENBORG. Is it really so long since we met? Yes, so it is. Oh, it has been a happy time, I can tell you! And now you have come to town?

MISS LIND. I arrived this morning.

MRS. STENBORG. To have a merry Christmas, of course. Oh, how delightful! Yes, we will have a merry Christmas. Do take your things off. Aren’t you frozen? (Helping her.) There; now we’ll sit cosily by the fire. No, you take the armchair; I shall sit in this rocking-chair. (Seizes her hands.) Yes, now I can see the dear old face again. It was only at the first glance— But you’re a little paler, and perhaps a little thinner.

MRS. LIND. And much, much older, Nora!

MRS. STENBORG. Yes, perhaps a little older—not much—ever so little. (She suddenly checks herself; seriously.) Oh, what a thoughtless wretch I am! Here I sit chattering on, and—Dear, dear Christina, can you forgive me!

MRS. LIND. What do you mean, Nora?

MRS. STENBORG (softly). Poor Christina! I forgot: you are a widow.

MRS. LIND. Yes; my husband died three years ago.

MRS. STENBORG. I know, I know; I saw it in the papers. Oh, believe me, Christina, I did mean to write to you; but I kept putting it off, and something always came in the way.

MRS. LIND. I can quite understand that, Nora dear.
Mrs. Stenborg. No, Christina; it was horrid of me. Oh, you poor darling! how much you must have gone through!—And he left you nothing?

Mrs. Lind. Nothing.

Mrs. Stenborg. And no children?

Mrs. Lind. None.

Mrs. Stenborg. Nothing, nothing at all?

Mrs. Lind. Not even a sorrow or a longing to dwell upon.

Mrs. Stenborg (looking at her incredulously). My dear Christina, how is that possible?

Mrs. Lind (smiling sadly and stroking her hair). Oh, it happens so sometimes, Nora.

Mrs. Stenborg. So utterly alone! How dreadful that must be! I have three of the loveliest children. I can't show them to you just now; they're out with their nurse. But now you must tell me everything.

Mrs. Lind. No, no; I want you to tell me—

Mrs. Stenborg. No, you must begin; I won't be egotistical to-day. To-day I'll think only of you. Oh! but I must tell you one thing—perhaps you've heard of our great stroke of fortune?

Mrs. Lind. No. What is it?

Mrs. Stenborg. Only think! my husband has been made manager of the Joint Stock Bank.

Mrs. Lind. Your husband! Oh, how fortunate!

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes; isn't it? Now he'll leave that tiresome Government office, where they pay him so badly. For he is to enter on his new position at the New Year, and then he'll have a large salary, and percentages. In future we shall be able to live quite differently—just as we please, in fact. Oh, Christina, how happy I am! It's delightful to have lots of money, and no need to worry about things, isn't it?
Mrs. Lind. Yes; at any rate it must be delightful to have what you need.

Mrs. Stenborg. No, not only what you need, but heaps of money—heaps!

Mrs. Lind (smiling). Nora, Nora, haven’t you learnt reason yet? In our schooldays you were a shocking little spendthrift.

Mrs. Stenborg (quietly smiling). Yes; that’s what Thorvald says I am still. (Holding up her forefinger.) But “Nora, Nora” is not so silly as you all think. Oh! we haven’t had the chance of being spendthrifts. We have both had to work.

Mrs. Lind. You too?

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes, light work: copying, and embroidery, and things of that sort. But not so much as he of course. In the first year after our marriage he overworked himself terribly. Then the doctors declared he must go to the South.

Mrs. Lind. You spent a whole year in Italy, didn’t you?

Mrs. Stenborg. It was a wonderful, delicious journey, you may imagine! And it saved Thorvald’s life. But it cost a frightful lot of money, Christina.

Mrs. Lind. So I should think.

Mrs. Stenborg. Twelve hundred dollars! Isn’t that a lot of money?

Mrs. Lind. How lucky you had the money to spend.

Mrs. Stenborg. We got it from father, you must know.

Mrs. Lind. Ah, I see. He died just about that time, didn’t he?

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes, Christina, just then. And only think! I couldn’t go and nurse him! I had to stay here with Thorvald, of course; he was ill too. Dear, good father! I never saw him again, Christina. Oh! that's the hardest thing I have had to bear since my marriage.

MRS. LIND. But then you went to Italy?

MRS. STENBORG. Yes; you see, we had the money, and the doctors said we must lose no time. We started three weeks later.

MRS. LIND. And your husband came back completely cured?

MRS. STENBORG. Sound as a bell. [MRS. LINDE. But wasn't that the doctor—?] He has never had an hour's illness since that time. Only he has to be careful, the doctor says, and avoid any kind of excitement. And I shall take good care of that. Oh, it will be so easy now. He shall have no anxiety and no annoyance. I and the children will make things so comfortable for him. (Jumps up and claps her hands.) Oh, Christina, Christina, what a wonderful thing it is to live and to be happy!— Oh, but it's really too horrid of me! Here am I talking about nothing but my own concerns. (Seats herself upon a footstool close to CHRISTINA, and seizes her hands.) Oh, don't be angry with me!— Now tell me, is it really true that you didn't love your husband? What made you marry him, then?

MRS. LIND. My old mother was still alive, you see, bedridden and helpless, and then I had my two younger brothers to think of. I didn’t think it would be right for me to refuse him.

MRS. STENBORG. Perhaps it wouldn’t have been. I suppose he was rich then?

MRS. LIND. Very well off, I believe. But his business was uncertain. It fell to pieces at his death, and there was nothing left.

MRS. STENBORG. And then——?
Mrs. Lind. Then I had to fight my way by keeping a shop, a little school, anything I could turn my hand to. My whole life since that time has been one long, weary struggle. My old mother no longer needs anything, for she is at rest, as perhaps you know. But my heaviest years for the two boys are still to come; they are now getting into the higher classes; their school fees and all their requirements are increasing. (Stands up restlessly.) It can’t be done any longer in that out-of-the-way corner, Nora! That is why I came here. They say that here things are better than they used to be for us women. I must try to get some office work—some settled employment—

Mrs. Stenborg. But, Christina, that’s such drudgery, and you look worn out already. It would be ever so much better for you to go to some watering-place and rest.

Mrs. Lind. I have no father to pay my travelling expenses, Nora!

Mrs. Stenborg (rising). Oh, don’t be vexed with me. Mrs. Lind. My dear Nora, don’t you be vexed with me. The worst of a position like mine is that it makes one so bitter. You become selfish; you have to be always on the strain. When I heard of the happy change in your fortunes—can you believe it?—I was glad not for your sake, but for my own.

Mrs. Stenborg. How do you mean? Ah, I see! You think my husband can perhaps do something for you.

Mrs. Lind. Yes; I thought so.

Mrs. Stenborg. And so he shall, Christina. I’m sure he will. I’ll keep at him, you see. He shan’t have any peace until he has hit upon something or other.

Mrs. Lind. How good of you, Nora, to stand by me so warmly! Doubly good in you, who know so little of the troubles and burdens of life.

Mrs. Stenborg. I? I know so little of——?

Mrs. Lind (smiling). Oh, well—a little copying, and so forth.—You’re a child, Nora.

Mrs. Stenborg (tosses her head and paces the room). Oh, come, you mustn’t be so patronising!

Mrs. Lind. No?

Mrs. Stenborg. You’re like the rest. You all think there’s nothing serious about me——

Mrs. Lind. Well, well——

Mrs. Stenborg. You think I’ve had no troubles in this world.

Mrs. Lind. My dear Nora, you’ve just told me all your troubles.

Mrs. Stenborg. Those trifles! (Softly.) I haven’t told you the great thing.

Mrs. Lind. The great thing? What do you mean?

Mrs. Stenborg. You look down upon me. You are proud of having worked so hard and so long for your old mother.

Mrs. Lind. I’m sure I don’t look down upon you; but it’s true I am proud and glad when I remember that I was able to keep my mother’s last days free from care.

Mrs. Stenborg. And you will be both proud and glad too when once you have got your brothers into a good position.

Mrs. Lind. Have I not the right to be?

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes indeed. But now let me tell you, Christina—I, too, have something to be proud and glad of.

Mrs. Lind. No doubt;—but what do you mean?

Mrs. Stenborg. Hush! Not so loud. Thorvald is in there. He mustn't for the world— No one must know about it, Christina—no one but you.

Mrs. Lind. Why, what can it be?

Mrs. Stenborg. Come over here. (Takes her over to the stove.) I, too, have something to be proud and glad of. I saved my husband's life.

Mrs. Lind. Saved his life?

Mrs. Stenborg. I told you about our going to Italy. Thorvald would have died but for that.

Mrs. Lind. Well—and your father gave you the money.

Mrs. Stenborg (smiling). Yes, so Thorvald and everyone believes; but——

Mrs. Lind. But——?

Mrs. Stenborg. Father didn't give us one penny. It was I that found the money.

Mrs. Lind. You? All that money?

Mrs. Stenborg. Twelve hundred dollars. What do you say to that?

Mrs. Lind. My dear Nora, how did you manage it? Did you win it in the lottery?

Mrs. Stenborg. No, indeed I didn't.

Mrs. Lind. Then where ever did you get it from?

Mrs. Stenborg (smiling and humming gaily). H'm; tra-la-la-la!

Mrs. Lind. Of course you couldn't borrow it.

Mrs. Stenborg. No? Why not?

Mrs. Lind. Why, a wife can't borrow without her husband's consent.

Mrs. Stenborg (tossing her head). Oh, when one has some idea of business—and knows how to set about things——

Mrs. Lind. But, Nora, I don't understand——

Mrs. Stenborg. Well, you needn't. I never said I borrowed the money. There are many ways I may have got it. That's beside the point, you see. But——

Mrs. Lind. Listen to me, Nora dear: haven't you been a little rash?

Mrs. Stenborg. Is it rash to save one's husband's life?

Mrs. Lind. No, but without his knowledge——

Mrs. Stenborg. But it would have been fatal for him to know! He wasn't even to suspect how ill he was. The doctors came to me privately and told me his life was in danger—that nothing could save him but a journey to the South. Do you think I didn't try diplomacy first? I told him how I longed to have a trip abroad, like other young wives; and then I hinted that he could borrow the money. But then, Christina, he got almost angry with me. He said I was frivolous and understood nothing at all about serious matters and that it was his duty as a husband not to yield to my whims and fancies —so I think he called them. Well, I had to save him, you see; and then I found the way to do it.

Mrs. Lind. And was there never any explanation between him and your father?

Mrs. Stenborg. No, never. Father died at that very time; I thought of telling him all about it and coaching him in what to say; but as he lay ill—unhappily, it wasn't necessary.

Mrs. Lind. And you have never confessed to your husband?

Mrs. Stenborg. Good heavens! What can you be thinking of? Tell him, when he has such a loathing of debt! No, this thing is my grand secret, Christina. Oh, you may believe it has been no joke to meet my engagements punctually. You must know that in business there are things called instalments, and quarterly inter-rest, that are terribly hard to provide for. So I've had to pinch a little, wherever I could. I couldn't save out of the housekeeping, for of course Thorvald had to live well. And I couldn't let the children go about badly dressed; all I got for them, I spent on them, the blessed darlings!

Mrs. Lind. So it had to come out of your own pocket-money, Nora?

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes, of course. After all, the whole thing was my doing; so it was my finery and my amusements that had to suffer. When Thorvald gave me money for clothes, and so on, I never spent more than half of it; I always bought the simplest things. Oh, it was often very hard, Christina dear; for it's nice to be beautifully dressed. (Smiling.) And with all that he calls me a spendthrift, and says the money seems to melt away in my hands.

Mrs. Linde. How much have you been able to pay off?

Mrs. Stenborg. Well, I can't precisely say. It's difficult to keep that sort of business clear. But it doesn't matter much now. There will be so many resources open to me now; for we are going to live quite differently from the way we have been doing. Oh, Christina, how glorious it is to think of! Free from all anxiety! Free, quite free. To be able to play and romp about with the children; to have things tasteful and pretty in the house. And then the spring will soon be here, with the great blue sky. Perhaps then we shall be able to travel, on railways and great steamships, and see foreign countries again. The first time I saw so little, for I was so anxious about Thorvald then. Oh, what a wonderful thing it is to live and to be happy! And you shall be happy too, Christina; as happy as you can be, poor dear, without either husband or children— (A bell rings outside.)

Who can that be?

Mrs. Linde (rising). Perhaps I had better go.

Mrs. Stenborg. No; do stay. It’s sure to be someone who wants to see Thorvald; he won’t come through here.

Maid-Servant (in the doorway). If you please, ma’am, Mr. Krogstad insists on seeing Mr. Stenborg—

Mrs. Stenborg (springing up). My husband—!

Mrs. Linde (starts). Who is it?

Maid. But I didn’t know, as the Doctor is in there—

Mrs. Stenborg (in the doorway). What do you want to see my husband about?

Krogstad (in the hall). Only about things that are of no interest to anyone else. (Seeing Mrs. Linde.) But—surely that can’t be—

Mrs. Stenborg. Mrs. Linde—from the west country. Well, go into my husband’s room; I dare say he can see you. (To the maid.) Open the door for Mr. Krogstad. (Shuts the door into the hall and goes back to Mrs. Linde.) Do you know that man, Christina?

Mrs. Linde. I used to know him—before I was married. He was in a lawyer’s office in our town.

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes, so he was.

Mrs. Linde. How he has changed!

Mrs. Stenborg. I believe his marriage was unhappy.

Mrs. Linde. And he is a widower now?

Mrs. Stenborg. With a lot of children.

Mrs. Linde. And his business is not of the most creditable, they say?

Mrs. Stenborg. No, they say it isn’t. But don’t let us think of business. It’s so tiresome.

(Doctor Hank comes out of Stenborg’s room.)

The Doctor (still in the doorway). No, no; I’d rather go; I'll have a chat with your wife.  (Shuts the door and sees Mrs. Linde.) Ah, I beg your pardon——

MRS. STENBORG (introduces them). Doctor Hank—Mrs. Linde.

HANK. Oh, indeed? Your old friend—or rather, your friend of old days.  I think I saw you as I came in, Mrs. Linde. And now you’ve come up for Christmas? Quite right, too. One ought to enjoy life as well as one can.

MRS. STENBORG. Yes, oughtn’t one, Doctor?

HANK. Then we’re agreed upon that? But, I say, you’ve got a new carpet! Congratulate you! Yes, and a very handsome carpet, too. Now, is that a luxury? I say, no, it isn’t. A carpet like that gives you a good return for your money, ladies; with a carpet like that under one’s feet one has higher and finer thoughts, nobler feelings, than one would have in an uncomfortable room with cold, creaking planks under one. And especially where there are children. [The race is ennobled in beautiful surroundings.]

MRS. STENBORG. Oh, how often I have felt the same; but I have never been able to give it expression.

HANK. No, I dare say not. You see, it belongs to psychological statistics; and that is a science that is not much developed at present. But it is possible to show a connection between such things. For instance, if that fellow who is with Stenborg——

MRS. STENBORG. Mr. Krogstad?

HANK. Yes, if Krogstad had been brought up in a home which, so to speak, was on the sunny side of life, with all its spiritual windows facing the light, instead of the cursed cold, damp north—I know it—I’ll undertake to say that he would have turned out a decent person, like the rest of us.
MRS. LINDE. Then he is not one?
HANK. He can’t be one. Impossible. His marriage was not such that he could be one. An unhappy marriage is like the small-pox; it leaves marks on the soul!
MRS. STENBORG. And what does a happy marriage do?
HANK. It acts like a course of baths; it drives out all the noxious humours and encourages the growth of all that is good and useful in a man. What would have become of Stenborg, I wonder, if he hadn’t found his little song-bird——?
MRS. STENBORG. What? How can you think that Thorvald should require——?
HANK. I know him. He would have become a bit of a slave to duty, a bit of a drudge, a bit of a pedant—in a good sense.
MRS. STENBORG. Fie, Doctor, now I’m angry with you.
HANK. But don’t you think it’s true? (Sees Stenborg coming.) Then ask him yourself.
MRS. STENBORG. No, no, no, leave off. (To Stenborg.) Has he gone?
STENBORG. Yes, this moment.
MRS. STENBORG. Thorvald, let me introduce you—this is Christin——
STENBORG. Ah, Mrs. Linde! Welcome. I have just heard from Krogstad that you were here.
MRS. LINDE. From Krogstad——?
MRS. STENBORG. What has it to do with him?
STENBORG. Well, he connected it with what he had to say to me.
MRS. LINDE. My being here?
STENBORG. Yes, he thinks he can see a design behind everything.
Mrs. Stenborg. But what did he want with you?

Stenborg. It's really a tiresome story. (To Dr. Hank.) I dare say you know that for the last year or so Krogstad has had a little place in the Joint Stock Bank?

Hank. Yes; what of it?

Stenborg. When I accepted the post of manager I made it one of my conditions that there should be a weeding-out of the staff.

Hank. And that was by no means unnecessary, from what one hears.

Stenborg. More necessary than people suppose. Jobbery and routine had got the upper hand in an altogether unwarrantable way. I can't put up with that; I mean to begin with a staff that I can depend upon in everything. I have therefore seen to it that all the undesirables have received notice.

Hank. You were quite right there.

Mrs. Linde. And Krogstad is among them?

Stenborg. Yes, I'm sorry to say so, he above all. He is altogether untrustworthy.

Mrs. Stenborg. Oh but, Thorvald, you've known him for years.

Stenborg. For that very reason I must be all the more strict. I wish indeed I could spare him; but it is impossible. You must not think me hard-hearted, Mrs. Linde. I am certainly not that; but I have a duty and a regard for the institution I am to manage. I obtained my post by opposition to the existing system, by a pamphlet, by a series of newspaper articles and by decisive action at the last general meeting. And am I to begin by contradicting myself?

Hank. No, I hope you'll do nothing of the sort.

Stenborg. I simply can't do so. My task is before all things to restore public confidence in the bank; and therefore there must be a weeding-out.

Mrs. Linde. And yet I'm sorry for the people who will be hit.

Mrs. Stenborg. So am I.

Stenborg. And I no less.

Hank. There we have it! This damned humanity! Excuse me if I express myself rather strongly. But it makes me wild when I hear—. Who are the people who will suffer? Incapable or disorderly individuals, drunkards many of them, persons who take advantage of the weakness of their superiors to obtain advances or loans that they can never repay.

Stenborg. Yes, you're not far from the truth.

Hank. And then, who is it that will suffer next? Why, the shareholders, myself and a lot of other honest men. We are the people who are robbed by incapacity and irregularity and apathy, so that we never see a penny of our deposits. But nobody pities us. No, of course not; we are not failures, we are not drunkards, forgers, discharged convicts; and these are the sort of fellows who have a monopoly of pity in our humane age.

Mrs. Linde. And I suppose they are the ones who most need it.

Hank. But we don't need the degenerate specimens of the race; we can do without them. Study the natural sciences, ladies, and you will see how there is one law pervading everything. The stronger tree deprives the weaker of the conditions of life and turns them to its own use. The same thing happens among animals; the unfit individuals in a herd have to make way for the better ones. And that is how nature progresses. It is only we human beings who forcibly retard progress by taking care of the unfit individuals.—But, bless my soul!
I'm standing here talking and forgetting all about a patient I ought to look up. The brute is quite capable of slipping through my hands.

Mrs. Linde. Is that another specimen of the unfit, Doctor?

Hank. A drunken scoundrel of a miner; got his right hand blown off while tipsy. If he survives it, he'll be fit for nothing——

Mrs. Linde. But then it would surely be best to get rid of him.

Hank (putting on his coat). Yes, you're perfectly right there; that is a thought that often forces itself upon us doctors, especially when we're practising among the poor. But who is going to take such a responsibility? Not I. I won't say anything about its being punishable by law; but even if it were not—— No, Mrs. Linde, our development has not yet gone far enough for that. Well, good-bye, good-bye, ladies.

Stenborg. Wait, I'll go with you.

Mrs. Linde. Yes, it's time I was going too, Nora. Where is the post office?

Stenborg. I'll show you. We'll go together.

Mrs. Linde. Thanks. (Aside, as she puts on her things.) Not a word to your husband about me——

Mrs. Stenborg. Oh, but Christina!

Mrs. Linde. You can see it would be of no use.

Mrs. Stenborg. Poor Christina. But come back this evening.

(They go towards the door, talking, and out into the hall. Outside on the stairs are heard children's voices.)

Mrs. Stenborg. There they are! There they are! (She runs to the outer door and opens it. The nurse enters the hall with the three children.)
Mrs. Stenborg. Come in; come in; oh, my sweet darlings! Do you see them, Christina?

Hank. Don’t let us stand here chattering in the draught.

Stenborg. Come, Mrs. Linde, only mothers can stand such a temperature.

(Dr. Hank, Mrs. Linde and Stenborg go out.

Mrs. Stenborg, the nurse and the children enter the room.)

Mrs. Stenborg. How fresh and red you look! Have you had great fun?—Oh, really! You’ve been giving Emmy and Bob a ride on your sledge; why, you’re quite a man, Alf. Oh, give him to me a little, Anna. (Takes the smallest one on her arm and dances with him.) Yes, yes; I’ll dance with you too—What! Did you have a game of snowballs? Oh, I should have liked to be there. No, let me take their things off, Anna. Go to the nursery; you look frozen. You’ll find some hot coffee there.

(The Nurse goes out to the left. Mrs. Stenborg takes off the children’s things and throws them down anywhere, while the children all talk together.)

(She and the children play, with laughter and shouting, in the room and the adjacent one to the left. At last Mrs. Stenborg hides under the table; the children come rushing in, look for her, but cannot find her, hear her half-choked laughter, rush to the table, lift up the cover and see her—loud shows, she creeps out as though to frighten them. Fresh shouts. Meanwhile there has been a knock at the door leading into the hall; no one has heard it. Now the door is half opened and Krogstad puts his head in.)

Krogstad. I beg your pardon, Mrs. Stenborg——

Mrs. Stenborg (with a slight cry, half jumps up).

Ah, what do you want?

Krogstad. Excuse me. The hall door was ajar—somebody must have forgotten to shut it——

Mrs. Stenborg (standing up). My husband is not at home, Mr. Krogstad.

Krogstad. I know it. I saw him go down the street.

Mrs. Stenborg. Then what do you want here?

Krogstad. To speak to you.

Mrs. Stenborg. To me? (To the children, softly.)

Go in to Anna. And mind you are quiet and good. What? No, the strange man won’t hurt mamma. When he’s gone we’ll go on playing. (She leads the children into the left-hand room, and shuts the door behind them. Softly, in suspense.) It is to me you wish to speak?

Krogstad. Yes, to you.

Mrs. Stenborg. To-day? But it’s not the first yet——

Krogstad. No, Mrs. Stenborg; it’s two days to Christmas. It will depend upon yourself what sort of a Christmas you will have.

Mrs. Stenborg. What do you want? I’m not ready to-day——

Krogstad. Never mind that for the present. I have come about another matter. You have a minute to spare——?
Mrs. Stenborg. Oh, yes, I suppose so; although—

Krogstad. Good. I was sitting in Olsen's restaurant opposite, and I saw your husband go down the street—

Mrs. Stenborg. Well?

Krogstad. —with a lady—

Mrs. Stenborg. It was Mrs. Linde.

Krogstad. I used to know that lady.

Mrs. Stenborg. She told me so.

Krogstad. Did she tell you no more?

Mrs. Stenborg. No; nothing at all.

Krogstad (suspiciously). H'm;—as I was saying, she has crossed my path once, and now it seems that she is going to do so again.

Mrs. Stenborg. But I don't understand at all—

Krogstad. Will you give me a straightforward answer to a question? Did Mrs. Linde come here to look for employment?

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes, she did.

Krogstad. I suppose it wasn't a place in the Joint Stock Bank that she—

Mrs. Stenborg. But I don't see—

Krogstad. I suppose it wasn't the situation that I'm to be turned out of?

Mrs. Stenborg. Mr. Krogstad, I don't see that I am bound to give you an account—

Krogstad. We will speak of our account presently.—You are perhaps aware that I have had notice.

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes.

Krogstad. By your husband's directions?

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes.

Krogstad. Mrs. Stenborg, you must see that I retain my position in the Bank.
Mrs. Stenborg. I? How can you imagine that I should have any such influence over my husband?

Krogstad. Oh, I don't suppose Mr. Stenborg is any more inflexible than other husbands.

Mrs. Stenborg. If you talk disrespectfully of my husband, I must request you to leave the house.

Krogstad. You are bold, madam.

Mrs. Stenborg. I am afraid of you no longer. When New Year's Day is over, I shall soon be out of the whole business.

Krogstad. Listen to me, Mrs. Stenborg. If I fight as though for my life to keep my place in the Bank, it is not for the sake of the salary.

Mrs. Stenborg. Why then?

Krogstad. It is because this place is a kind of position of confidence; it is the only situation that any one has entrusted to me. Of course you know, like every one else, that some years ago I—got into trouble?

Mrs. Stenborg. I've heard something of the sort.

Krogstad. The matter never came into court; but from that moment all paths were barred to me. Then I took up the business you know about. I had to turn my hand to something; and I don't think I've been one of the worst. But now I must get clear of it all. My sons are growing up; for their sake I must try to recover my character as well as I can. This place in the Bank was the first step; and now your husband comes and kicks me off the ladder, and I am back in the mire.

Mrs. Stenborg. But I assure you, Mr. Krogstad, I have no power to help you.

Krogstad. I can compel you.

Mrs. Stenborg. You won't tell him that I owe you money?

Krogstad. Suppose I were to?
Mrs. Stenborg. It would be shameful of you. (Bursts into tears.) This secret is my joy and pride. I had been looking forward so eagerly to getting it all paid off by saving and working, and one day telling my husband that it was I—--. And you can have the heart to—!
(Hotly.) But just do it! And then you will lose your place! It would involve me in all sorts of unpleasantness; but then my husband will see what a bad man you are; and then you certainly won't keep your place.

Krogstad. Nothing but unpleasantness?

Mrs. Stenborg. My husband will of course pay what I owe you.

Krogstad. Either your memory is defective, or you don't know much about business. I must make the position a little clearer to you.

Mrs. Stenborg. How so?

Krogstad. When your husband was ill, you came to me to borrow twelve hundred dollars.

Mrs. Stenborg. I knew of nobody else.

Krogstad. I promised to find you the money.

Mrs. Stenborg. And you did find it.

Krogstad. I promised to find you the money, on certain conditions. You were so much taken up at the time about your husband's illness, and so eager to have the wherewithal for your journey, that you probably did not give much thought to the details. Allow me to remind you of them. I promised to find you the amount in exchange for a note of hand, which I drew up.

Mrs. Stenborg. Yes, and I signed it.

Krogstad. Quite right. But then I added a few lines, making your father security for the debt. Your father was to sign this.

Mrs. Stenborg. Was to—? He did sign it!

Krogstad. I had left the date blank. That is to say, your father was himself to date his signature. Do you recollect that?

MRS. STENBORG. Yes, I believe——

KROGSTAD. Then I gave you the paper to send to your father, by post. Is not that so?

MRS. STENBORG. Yes.

KROGSTAD. And of course you did so at once; for within eight or ten days you brought me back the document with your father’s signature; and I handed you the money.

MRS. STENBORG. Well? Have I not made my payments punctually?

KROGSTAD. Fairly—yes. But to return to the point: you were in great trouble at the time, Mrs. Stenborg?

MRS. STENBORG. I was indeed.

KROGSTAD. Your father was very ill, I believe?

MRS. STENBORG. He was on his death-bed.

KROGSTAD. And died soon after?

MRS. STENBORG. Yes.

KROGSTAD. Tell me, Mrs. Stenborg: do you happen to recollect the day of his death? The day of the month, I mean?

MRS. STENBORG. He died on the 29th of September.

KROGSTAD. Quite correct. I have made inquiries. And here comes in the remarkable point—— (produces a paper) which I cannot explain.

MRS. STENBORG. What remarkable point? I don’t know——

KROGSTAD. The remarkable point, madam, that your father signed this paper five days after his death!

MRS. STENBORG. What! I don’t understand——

KROGSTAD. Your father died on the 29th of September. But look here: he has dated his signature October 4th! Is not that remarkable, Mrs. Stenborg? (Mrs.
STENBORG is silent.) Can you explain it, madam? (MRS. STENBORG continues silent.) It is noteworthy, too, that the words "October 4th" and the year are not in your father's handwriting, but in one which I believe I know. Look there. Well, this may be explained; your father may have forgotten to date his signature, and somebody may have added the date here. There is nothing wrong in that. Of course it is genuine, Mrs. Stenborg? It was really your father himself who wrote his name here?

MRS. STENBORG (after a short silence, throws her head back, looks him firmly in the face and says proudly and defiantly). No, it was not. It was I who copied his signature.

KROGSTAD. Ah!—Are you aware, madam, that that is a dangerous admission?

MRS. STENBORG. How so? You will soon get your money.

KROGSTAD. May I ask you one more question? Why did you not send the paper to your father?

MRS. STENBORG. It was impossible. My father was very ill. Had I asked him for his signature, I should have had to tell him why I wanted the money; but he was so ill I really could not tell him that my husband's life was in danger. It was impossible.

KROGSTAD. Then would it not have been better to have given up your tour?

MRS. STENBORG. I couldn't do that; my husband's life depended on that journey. I couldn't give it up.

KROGSTAD. Did it never occur to you that you and your husband might die on the journey, and that I should then be defrauded of my money?

MRS. STENBORG. That was nothing to me. I didn't care in the least about you. I couldn't endure you for all the cruel difficulties you made, although you knew how ill my husband was.

Krogstad. Mrs. Stenborg, you evidently do not realise what you have been guilty of. Let me tell you it was nothing more nor worse that made me an outcast from society.

Mrs. Stenborg. You? You want me to believe that you did anything to save your wife's life?

Krogstad. The law takes no account of motives.

Mrs. Stenborg. Then it must be a very bad law.

Krogstad. Bad or not, the judges must follow it.

Mrs. Stenborg. I don't believe that. Do you mean to tell me that a daughter has no right to spare her invalid father?—that a wife has no right to save her husband's life? I don't know much about the law, but I'm sure you'll find, somewhere or another, that that is allowed. And you don't know that—you, a lawyer! You must be a bad one, Mr. Krogstad.

Krogstad. Allow me, madam—

Mrs. Stenborg. I don't want to hear any more—. You think you can frighten me, but you haven't succeeded. I'm not so foolish as you imagine.

Krogstad. Very well. I may tell you once more: you are on the edge of the precipice; you have everything to lose; your whole future; everything, I tell you. If I am flung into the gutter a second time, you shall keep me company. (Bows and goes out through hall.)

Nora (stands a while thinking, then reassured). Oh, nonsense! (Begins folding the children's clothes, but pauses in the middle: ) But—? No, it's impossible! Why, I did it for love!

Children (at the door, left). Mamma, has the strange man gone?
NORA. Yes; but don't tell papa that any one has been here.

CHILDREN. No, and now will you play with us again.

NORA. No, no; not now, children.

CHILDREN. Oh, do, mamma; you know you promised.

NORA. Yes, but I can't just now. Run to the nursery. I have so much to do. Run along, run along, and be good, my darlings! (She closes the door behind them; then takes up her knitting, but lets it drop again, then knits hurriedly and says in a spasmodic voice:). No, it's quite impossible!

Enter STENBORG from the hall.

NORA. Oh, you're back already?
STENBORG. Yes, Has anybody been here?

NORA. Here? No.

STENBORG. Are you sure? That's odd. I saw Krogstad come out of the house.

NORA. Did you? Oh, yes, by-the-bye, he was here for a minute.

STENBORG. Nora, he has been begging you to put in a good word for him?

NORA. Yes.

STENBORG. And you were to say nothing to me of his having asked you? You were to do it as if of your own accord?

NORA. Yes.

STENBORG. Nora, Nora! And you could agree to that! To condescend to intrigue with such a person! And to tell me an untruth!

NORA. An untruth!

STENBORG. Didn't you say that nobody had been here? My little bird must never do that again! A song-bird must sing clear and true; no false notes—. Well, well, well, it was the first time; let's say no more about it.
(Sits down before the fire.) Oh, how warm and quiet it is here!

Nora (busy with her parcels). Thorvald!

Stenborg. Yes.

Nora. Was it anything so very dreadful that poor Krogstad got into trouble about?

Stenborg. Forgery. Don't you know what that means?

Nora. But mayn't he have been driven to it by need?

Stenborg. Yes; or, like so many others, he may have done it in pure heedlessness. I am not so hard-hearted as to condemn a man absolutely for a single fault.

Nora. No, surely not, Thorvald.

Stenborg. I have seen examples of such men retrieving their character, when their crime has been discovered at once and they have taken the punishment.

Nora. Punishment—?

Stenborg. Yes, there's imprisonment for forgery. But that didn't happen with Krogstad. His crime was not discovered till long afterwards, and that is what has morally ruined him.

Nora. How—?

Stenborg. Just think how such a man must be always lying and canting and shamming. Think of the mask he must wear even towards those who stand nearest him—towards his own wife and children. The effect on the children—that's the most terrible part of it, Nora.

Nora. Why—?

Stenborg. Because in such an atmosphere of lies home life is poisoned and contaminated in every fibre; every breath the children draw contains some germ of evil.

Nora (behind him). Are you sure of that, Thorvald?

Stenborg. I have absolute statistical proof of it. I have studied these questions a good deal and I have found that nearly all cases of early corruption may be traced to lying mothers.

Nora. Mothers——?

Stenborg. Yes, mothers in particular; but of course the father's influence may act in the same way; and Krogstad knew that only too well. And yet he has been poisoning his own children for years past by a life of untruthfulness and hypocrisy. That is why I call him morally ruined. So my sweet little Nora must promise not to plead his cause. Shake hands upon it. Come, come, what's this? Give me your hand. That's right. Then it's a bargain. I assure you it would have been impossible for me to work with him; it gives me a sense of discomfort to come in contact with such people.

(Nora draws her hand away, and moves towards the table.)

Well, what is it?

Nora. It is so warm. Oh, I have so much to do.

Stenborg (rising). Yes, and I must try to get through my business. And then the Christmas-tree shall be decorated, and we'll bring the children in—and then we'll have a joyful and happy Christmas Eve, my precious little song-bird! (He goes into his room and shuts the door.)

Nora. No, no, no—! It can't be. I will decorate the Christmas-tree. No; not with my hands!

Anna (at the door, left). The children are asking if they may come in, ma'am?

Nora. No, no, don't let them come to me! Keep them with you, Anna.

Anna. Very well, ma'am. (Goes back into the nursery.)

Nora (pale with terror). Corrupt them? Poison—! No! Yes; yes!—But it's impossible! It must be impossible! Why, I did it for love!
SECOND ACT

The same room

Nora is putting on her hat and cloak; her muff and gloves are on the table.

Nora (anxiously, at the hall door). Is somebody coming?—Nobody. No, of course, he won’t come to-day; it’s New Year’s Eve; nor to-morrow either.—Stuff and nonsense! Of course he won’t come at all. He won’t do it. It won’t happen. It’s impossible.—O God, O God, put something in Thorvald’s mind, so that he won’t irritate that terrible man. O God, O God, I have three little children. Oh, do it for the sake of my little children!

Nurse (at the door, left). Now I have everything ready, if you would—. Oh, I see, you’re going out, ma’am?

Nora. Yes, I must go out. Isn’t it fearfully close in here? I feel as if I should be stifled.

Nurse. But there’s a keen wind out-of-doors. Do be careful, ma’am; you might easily make yourself ill.

Nora. Well, what does that matter? Do you count it a misfortune to be ill?

Nurse. Yes, that I do.

Nora. But people are sympathetic towards those who are ill. No one will do any harm to a person who is ill.—Oh yes, though, there is somebody who would do it.

Nurse. Oh, but, ma’am—

Nora. Listen, Lena, if anything should happen to me, will you promise to take care of the children—

Nurse. But you make me so terribly frightened, ma’am. Is anything the matter?
Nora. No, no, but nobody can tell what may happen. Oh, Lena, you must never desert them, so long as they need you. Will you promise me that?

Nurse (in tears). Didn’t I look after Nora when she was little and had no mother? Can Nora think that I should desert her little children?

Nora. No, of course not, I know that very well, Lena. Oh, the little darlings will still be well, if I am not—. But it isn’t certain that anything will happen. So many strange things happen in the world; so many people are saved from great misfortunes. Very often it turns out to be only a dream. Oh, how splendid it would be to wake up and come to one’s senses and cry out, I’ve been dreaming, I’ve been dreaming!

Nurse. But, in heaven’s name, ma’am——

Nora. You mustn’t look so frightened. I had so little sleep last night.

Nurse. Yes, that’s the fault of all these parties. Oh, ma’am, is it wise?—out every single evening the whole Christmas week; out till late at night.

Nora. Ah, but it’s lovely, Lena—there’s music and lights, and beautiful clothes—and so much amusement; one forgets; one doesn’t think—Oh, but it’s lovely to live, Lena—to be young—to be really alive. Look, how the sun is shining—the snow is dripping off the roofs; it is not cold, as you said—it’s spring weather—we shall soon have spring—and—Spring!

Nurse. What is it, ma’am? You’re as white as a sheet.

Nora. Oh, it was fearful.

Nurse. What? What was it?

Nora. I was thinking of the terrible story you told me when I was little.

Nurse. I?
Nora. Don't you remember the girl who lived near us, who had helped to murder her father and was executed? When they came to fetch her she screamed: No, not now in the spring-time! Not now in the sunshine!—Yes, it is terrible to die in the spring-time and in the sunshine.

Nurse. As I'm alive, as soon as the Doctor comes I'll—

Nora. You're not to say a single word to the Doctor. You silly old Lena—(laughing) how could you be so frightened—ha, ha, ha—can't you guess that I was joking—

Nurse. Well, then God forgive Nora——

Nora. Yes, yes, it was horrid of me. (Petting her.) Don't be angry; I'll never do it again. Oh, now you're laughing! That's right; go in to the children——

Nurse. Yes, I'll go. But I'll never forget how frightened I was. (She goes into the nursery.)

Nora. There, there. Now I'll go out. Only not to think. Only not to think.—What a delicious muff! Beautiful gloves! Beautiful gloves!—To forget!—One, two, three, four, five, six— (With a scream.) Ah, who's that?

Stenborg (at the hall hoor). Heavens! what's happening?

Nora. Oh, is it you?

Stenborg. Of course. Is that anything to be frightened of, silly little girl? But how worn-out you look, my dear Nora. What is the matter with you?

Nora. You know, we were up very late last night.

Stenborg. Much too late. But we'll make an end of that.

Nora. Yes, there will soon be an end of that.
Stenborg. Fortunately. After New Year's Day, work will begin.

Nora. New Year's Day;—why, that's to-morrow.

Stenborg. And the day after to-morrow, business. Are you going out—?

Nora. Yes.

Stenborg. What, again? You've already been out once to-day.

Nora. If you would rather, I will stay at home.

Stenborg. No, go if you like; it will bring the roses back into your cheeks. They suit you so well. My little elf mustn't have such pale cheeks and tired eyes. I must have you about me, well and fresh and lively, to make me feel happy and comfortable. (Kissing her.) There, now go; I'll get on with my work. I've been down to the Bank and brought home these papers.

Nora. To the Bank? Have you already—?

Stenborg. It's only some details that I want to make myself more familiar with. Good-bye; go now; but don't catch cold.

Nora. Thorvald.

Stenborg. Yes.

Nora. If your little squirrel were to beg you for something so prettily?

Stenborg. Well?

Nora. Would you do it?

Stenborg. I must first know what it is.

Nora. The squirrel would skip about and play all sorts of tricks if you would do it.

Stenborg. Out with it.

Nora. Your lark would twitter from morning till night—

Stenborg. Nora—

Nora. Your elf would dance for you, Thorvald—
STENBORG. I understand. Have you really the courage to ask me that again——?

NORA. I beg and implore you, Thorvald!

STENBORG. You have done that every single day this week.

NORA. Yes, but to-day you will do what I ask.

STENBORG. I shall not. What has put it into your head to be so frightened of this person, to be afraid I shall make an enemy of him, that he will write against me in the newspapers? It is an insult to me, Nora, a double insult, first to think that I am weak and then that I am afraid.

NORA. No, no, no, it's not an insult. Oh, we could live so quietly and happily now, in our cosy, peaceful home, you and I and the children.—The children, the children, Thorvald!

STENBORG. The children? What about them?

NORA. Oh, Thorvald, you must do what I ask. Remember, it is the last day of the year. This is the last thing I shall ask of you this year.

STENBORG. And you would end the year by carrying through a wilful fancy? Yes, you are wilful, Nora; you have never learnt to overcome your whims. That is your father's fault. He was too indulgent with you. I'm sure he was never able to deny you anything. And I haven't been able to, either. I am partly to blame. But this must be changed; it is for your own good.

NORA. Yes, after this! Be strict, Thorvald—be as strict as you like; but do what I ask just this once. Do you hear, Thorvald——

STENBORG. We'll put an end to this. (Rings the bell by the door to the hall.)

NORA. What do you want?
Stenborg. To settle the thing. (The Maid enters.)

Here; take this letter; give it to a messenger. See that he takes it at once. The address is on it. Here's the money.

Maid. Very well, sir. (Goes out.)

Stenborg. There, my little song-bird.

Nora. Thorvald, what was in the letter?

Stenborg. It was a business letter.

Nora. What was in the letter, Thorvald.

Stenborg. Krogstad's dismissal.

Nora. Call it back again, Thorvald! There's still time.

Stenborg. There is no time; he must have it before the year is out.

Nora. Oh, call it back again, Thorvald! For my sake. For your own sake. For the children's sake. Oh, Thorvald, you don't know what you're doing.

Stenborg. Have I deserved this of you—this anxiety? Yes, Nora, it is a slur upon me. I understand very well what you are thinking of. You remember all the accusations and denunciations and newspaper attacks that your father in his time was exposed to, and that caused him so many bitter hours. And now you are afraid that I—; that is what offends me, Nora. But you ought to know that I am unimpeachable, while your father was not.

Nora. Thorvald!

Stenborg. No, your father was not a methodical official, Nora. I can give you an example; I have never cared to tell you before, but now you shall know it. The twelve hundred dollars that he gave you when you insisted on going to Italy were never even entered in his accounts; it is quite impossible to find out where he got them from.

Nora. My poor, poor father.
Stenborg. My dearest Nora, I’m not saying that to hurt you, but to make you understand what a difference there is between him and me. I make no reproach against your father; he was the kindest-hearted man, much too good; and he was on his death-bed at the time.

Nora. Oh, what a good thing it was that father died!

Stenborg. There, there, there, my little song-bird! We won’t have any of that. What are you saying? That it’s a good thing to die? Is that the sort of thing for little song-birds, who are just beginning to live? Now then, a cheerful face, to give me light and warmth. Isn’t that what you’re for?

Nora. Who’s that coming?

Stenborg. What, anxious again?

(Doctor Rank comes in from the hall.)

Rank. Good-day to you. All well?

Stenborg. Oh, fairly.

Nora. Yes, thanks, Doctor.

Stenborg. But you don’t look too well yourself.

Rank. I am running down hill; there’s no help for it.

Stenborg. Oh, but, my dear friend.

Rank. Yes, yes—why lie to one’s self? In these last days I have been auditing my life-account. A confoundedly wretched result. I may be tolerably certain that this is the last New Year’s Eve I shall see. A year hence I shall lie rotting in the churchyard.

Nora. Ugh, that’s frightful——

Rank. Well, one has to go some day. But to suffer thus for another’s sin! Where’s the justice of it? And yet you can trace in every family an inexorable retribution. It is my father’s wild oats that my poor spinal marrow must do penance for.

Stenborg. Oh, you’ll last a long while yet with that spinal marrow.
Rank. Like a Lazarus; it isn't a very tempting prospect. Ah, for a healthy, happy person it must be a desperate thing to have to go. For one who has a home, a circle of dear ones around him—

Nora. Good-bye.

Rank. Are you going out?

Nora. Yes, yes; I must have some fresh air. Good-bye. (She goes out.)

Rank. Is anything the matter with her?

Stenborg. I don't know what to say; she has been like that all the week, in an unnaturally excited condition; she has all kinds of needless anxieties; it seems as if she was not at ease in the house; she no longer plays with the children—

Rank. It is the great change in your position—

Stenborg. Yes, it must come from that. She seems to be constantly tormented by the idea that it will not last.

Rank. I see, I see.

Stenborg. At first she was so exuberantly happy about it. You can imagine—with her light-hearted disposition, how she felt on being suddenly placed in a position free from care and even opulent. My poor little Nora; I blame myself for not having prepared her more cautiously.

Rank. Yes, perhaps you ought to have done so.

Stenborg. But I couldn't guess—and besides, I couldn't deny myself the pleasure of seeing her so radiantly happy. (Nora re-enters.) What? Are you back already?

Nora. Yes, I couldn't stand it. I had such a feeling of anxiety; one never knows what may happen when one is out. I must see the children—(Goes to the door and lays her hand on the handle, but quickly withdraws it.)
Stenborg. Why don't you go in?
Nora. No, no, I won't go to them. There's no need to; I can hear that everything is quiet; I will stay here with you.

Stenborg. Well, you must dispense with my society for half an hour, my dear Nora.

Nora. Oh, no, no, Thorvald, don't go out.

Stenborg. I don't intend to; I must do some work in my room. But Rank will stay a little while—(Signs to him.) Won't you? I think you said—

Rank. Yes, I shall be glad to walk about a little on your new carpet.

Stenborg. And I'll make fast my door. No one is to come in; no disturbers of the peace; no squirrels among my papers—

(Goes into his room and bolts the door.)

Nora (taking off her hat and cloak). Don't you think it's frightfully warm, Doctor?

Rank. No, on the contrary.

Nora. You're cold, perhaps?

Rank. Not that either. You keep a pleasant temperature as usual. That is one of the wonderful gifts that many women have—when one enters their rooms, one is permeated, as it were, by a gentle sense of well-being.

Nora. Oh, yes, it is pleasant here.

Rank. Yes, isn't it? We bachelors have a keen sense for such things. And we know how to appreciate them. The worthy husbands don't always do that. They get so used to it; they think that all these blessings are a matter of course, something that follows quite naturally from the fact that one is alive. It is the same as with a constant unremitting noise; one does not notice it until it ceases. I am almost certain that this is the case with Stenborg. Now that your circumstances allow it, you ought now and then to leave him for a day or two.

Nora (after a short pause). Do you think he would miss me much, if I were away?

Rank. Try.

Nora. Oh, no, no, no. For heaven’s sake, don’t speak like that. Who would do such a thing voluntarily? To leave him and the children!

Rank. I knew it. But with him, Mrs. Stenborg? With him and the children too.

Nora. Ah, that would be lovely.

Rank. To get away a little; to see the great open sea again—you who are so fond of the sea.

Nora. Oh, yes, the sea, the sea! Isn’t the sea splendid?

Rank. And then, to see your home from a distance, in a new light.

Nora. And to come back again, to go round one’s own rooms, arranging all the beautiful things one has brought home, to play with the children, to see them growing strong and— (In terror.) Ah!—

Rank. What’s the matter?

Nora. Oh, it was nothing; it was something I just remembered, something that had escaped my memory.

Rank. May I feel your pulse?

Nora. No, no, there’s nothing wrong with me; I assure you—

Rank. There is something on your mind, in any case. Do you think it is any use denying that to me? And why do you wish to deny it? Why hide anything from an old friend? For I am one, am I not?

Nora. Oh, Doctor Rank!

Rank. Well, what is it?
Nora. No, no, I can't.—Well, tell me this, Doctor; is Thorvald quite strong now?
Rank. Yes, certainly he is.
Nora. Are you quite sure that he could stand a great shock, a great grief, or anything of that sort?
Rank. What kind of a shock or grief are you talking about?
Nora. I can't tell; so many things might happen. At the time he was ill you said he must avoid any strong emotion.
Rank. Yes, at that time.
Nora. And do you think after all that Thorvald is so immoderately fond of me?
Rank. But, my dear Mrs. Stenborg—
Nora. Perhaps it would be well if he were not so. And yet I think he would surely be able to bear it, he would surely get over it.
Rank. What, Mrs. Stenborg? What?
Nora. If anything happened to me. Doctor, I am so fearfully anxious. My head is so confused. Suppose I went out of my mind?
Rank. What is the meaning of this? What makes you think of such things?
Nora. Oh, one never knows—. Or if something else happened to me; if I could not stay with him any longer—Rank. What?
Nora. Oh, Doctor, he would surely be able to survive it.
Rank. My dear Mrs. Stenborg, these are fancies that you must struggle against with all your might.
Nora. Oh, yes; oh, yes; I shall do that. But tell me, don't you think that Thorvald would survive it, like other men, if he lost me?
Rank. Well, you see, this idea of a thing being the death of a person is in most cases nothing but a figure of speech, at any rate as far as the male sex is concerned. As a matter of fact, we survive everything, my dear Mrs. Stenborg. At the moment when the blow falls, it seems impossible to bear it. But time passes, day after day, and one learns to accept the inevitable, one makes fresh ties—

Nora. Fresh ties—!

Rank. Well, I mean—

Nora. Fresh ties—! I hadn't thought of that.

But no, no, no!

Rank. I must speak to Stenborg.

Nora. What will you speak about?

Rank. About your condition.

Nora. You won't! You mustn't do that!

Rank. I must. All this is so inexplicable and so serious—

Nora. Oh, I beg you not to alarm him.

Rank. Don't be uneasy, I'll do it as gently as possible; but both for his sake and your own we must find some way—

Nora. Oh, there is no way of escaping from this.

Rank. From what?

Nora. From what is going to happen; I don't know, but I feel—

Rank. H'm— (Knocks.) Open the door, I must speak to you.

Stenborg (opening his door). Well?

Rank. Look here— (Softly.) Don't be uneasy, Mrs. Stenborg! (He and Stenborg go into the room; the bolting of the door is heard.)

Nora (listening at the door). What are they talking about? They are whispering. What are they saying about me? What does he think? Oh, it isn’t yet—.

In to the children. (Stops before the door on the left.)

No, no, mustn’t see them. (Mrs. Linde enters from the hall.) Oh, Christina, is that you? I’m so glad you have come.

Mrs. Linde. I hear you called at my lodgings.

Nora. Yes, but you had just gone out. I’m so glad you have come. I want so much to see you and speak to you.

Mrs. Linde. And I have come to thank your husband—

Nora. Have you heard already?

Mrs. Linde. Yes, I have just got the letter. Perhaps he is not at home?

Nora. Yes, he is; but Doctor Rank is with him. Sit down here with me till he comes. No, don’t sit down. I’m so restless. Let us walk up and down.

Mrs. Linde. Nora dear, you’re not well, are you?

Nora. Oh, yes, oh, yes. So you’ve heard from him? You got the letter, you said?

Mrs. Linde. Yes, just as I was going out. Oh, it is a great kindness that your husband has shown me.

Nora. I hope it will bring you happiness.

Mrs. Linde. I feel happy already. In my position there is no greater happiness than to feel one’s self secure.

Nora. Yes, you’re right there; it is a great happiness to feel one’s self secure.

Mrs. Linde. Ah, you can’t appreciate the feeling as I do; you have never been tortured by insecurity.

Nora. Haven’t I? Have I not been tortured by anxiety for my husband’s life?

Mrs. Linde. That is true. Well, fortunately that time is past.
Nora. Ah, secure, secure. That is a great thing indeed. There is no greater happiness in the world. (Rings.) But who can feel really secure? (The Maid appears at the door.) Bring in tea.—

Mrs. Linde. So you’re going to a dance overhead to-morrow?

Nora. To-morrow? Yes, of course. I shall go up to it. It’s to be a children’s party. I’m going for the sake of the children. (The Maid enters with tea.) Thank you, move the table nearer the stove. And then bring us the lamp. (Exit Maid.) Now then, you must take a seat and make yourself comfortable.

Maid (brings the lamp and puts it on the table by the sofa). Is there anything else, ma’am?

Nora. No, thank you. (Exit Maid.) Now you shall taste real tea, Christina. I always have the best kind.

Mrs. Linde. And the best of tea-things too. How pretty and tasteful! And how well it all harmonises!

Nora. Yes, Thorvald will have everything like that; there must be style about it, he says, or it offends his eye. You see, the pattern on the cups corresponds to the pattern on the napkins.

Mrs. Linde. Yes, indeed you have pretty things.

Nora. And in future we shall have them still prettier. —In future——!

Mrs. Linde. What is the matter, Nora?

Nora. Hush; it was nothing; it was only a pain in the side. Look here; take the footstool for your feet. Now we’re comfortable; aren’t we?

Mrs. Linde. Yes. You really have a talent for making one comfortable.

Nora. Thorvald says the same.
Mrs. Linde. Ah, what would become of your husband if he had not you?
Nora. If he had not—? What makes you think of that? Why shouldn’t he have me?
Mrs. Linde. Oh, of course. I’m only saying, if he had not you.
Nora. Don’t you think somebody could be found who would look after him just as well?
Mrs. Linde. Not in his eyes.
Nora. Yet one often sees a man able to forget his first wife.
Mrs. Linde. Yes, and many a wife can forget her first husband.
Nora. But can you understand that, Christina?
Mrs. Linde. Oh, well, it depends—
Nora. Ah, but divorce, now; I don’t think I can understand that.
Mrs. Linde. No. But it happens nevertheless, my dear Nora; and it must happen.
Nora. Yes, yes, I know that; but it seems to me it must be so awful, so absolutely impossible to get over—
Mrs. Linde. Yes, it must be a hard struggle, no doubt.
Nora. To have to leave one’s house, everything; never to be allowed to see it again; to know that everything is there, but that one is as it were dead to it—. Tell me, Christina, what is it that usually makes married people separate?
Mrs. Linde. It may be that they don’t agree, or that one of them has brought shame upon the other.
Nora. Then the husband divorces his wife?
Mrs. Linde. Yes, in most cases, I suppose.
Nora. But sometimes he forgives her, doesn’t he?
FROM IBSEN’S WORKSHOP

Mrs. Linde. No doubt; but do you think that would be better?
Nora. No, you are right. It would not be better.—And the children, an unhappy divorced wife would not be allowed to keep them either? Is that really so?
Mrs. Linde. Yes, I believe so; that is, if she is the guilty party.
Nora. Oh, guilty, guilty; what does it mean, being guilty? Has not a wife the right to love her husband?
Mrs. Linde. Precisely; her husband—and only her husband.
Nora. Yes, of course, who is thinking of anything else? But that law is unjust, Christina. It is easy enough to see that it was made by men.
Mrs. Linde. Aha! you are beginning to go in for Woman’s Rights.
Nora. No, I don’t care about them at all. Do you, perhaps?
Mrs. Linde. Not in the least. I leave that to others; I have enough to do in fighting my own battle.
Nora. So have I.
Mrs. Linde. You?
Nora. Well, I mean—I think of all the unhappy mothers and unhappy little children. Christina, to think of one’s little children in the hands of strangers!
Mrs. Linde. That is better than that they should be with a criminal mother.
Nora. Oh, there are terrible things in the world.
(The Maid opens the door to Krogstad.)
Maid (softly). Madam——!
Nora (turns and starts; in a low and trembling voice). There he is!
‘Mrs. Linde (in the same tone). He! What does he want?
Nora (to The Maid). It's all right; go.

(The Maid goes out. Krogstad approaches.)

Krogstad. I'm afraid I'm disturbing you, ladies?
Nora. What do you want? My husband is not at home.

Krogstad. But I think he is in there.
Nora. Yes, but he can't see anyone.
Krogstad. He needn't either—

Nora. Go, Christina; go in to the children.

Mrs. Linde. Nora, what is this?
Nora. Go, go, Christina; I must speak to this man.

Mrs. Linde. I understand.

Nora. Oh, you don't understand anything.

Mrs. Linde. I understand. Krogstad—what have you come to?

Krogstad. To what—you drove me to.

Mrs. Linde. Ah—

Krogstad. It is too late now.

Mrs. Linde. Krogstad—we must talk by-and-bye.

Krogstad. Too late.

Nora. Go, go—

(Mrs. Linde goes into the room on the left.)

Nora (in suspense). Now?

Krogstad. Yes, now.

Nora. Mr. Krogstad, you won't do it.

Krogstad. Did he hesitate to do what he did?

Nora. Ah, but that was not my fault.

Krogstad. The wife must suffer for the husband's fault.

Nora. Oh, you don't know how I fought and pleaded your cause.

Krogstad. Did you do that from sympathy with me?

Nora. Oh, I've been fighting for my life these last days.
Krogstad. Bah, for your life! I too thought that my life was at stake when I got into trouble—but you see, Mrs. Helmer, I have survived it.

Nora. Yes, you—but how——?

Krogstad. How——?

Nora. But I can't live such a life as—as——

Krogstad. As I do, you mean——

Nora. Pardon me——

Krogstad. You'll see, you'll get along all right in time.

Nora. Mr. Krogstad, think of my little children——

Krogstad. Did your husband think of my children, when he closed my last road to recovery?

Nora. O God, O God, to die so young—to have to leave my husband and children——

Krogstad. And you want me to believe that you have the courage to die—ha, ha!——

Nora. You don't believe it?

Krogstad. Do you believe it yourself?

Nora. I have thought of nothing else the last few days.

Nora. Do you hear it roaring?

Krogstad. The river? Yes, of course, that is what you've been thinking of. But haven't you thought just casually—Think now of putting it into execution—Out of the house at night—down into the foaming black water—to be carried along, dragged under the ice—to struggle, be suffocated, and to be fished up—some day, from far below—and in what a state——
A DOLL'S HOUSE

Nora. Oh, it is horrible—oh, that I could not—Oh, it is horrible—

Krogstad. What, madam——?

Nora. You see it, don't you? It's no use concealing it; I have not the courage to die.

Krogstad. I thought you hadn't; but I wanted to make sure——

Nora. And then?

Krogstad. There is no need to, either. Nobody but your husband will know anything.

Nora. Oh, but he is the last person who must——

Krogstad. I dare say you have read in novels of villains whose only motive is revenge. Well, it might be very pleasant if everyone could say: Look, the wife of the bank manager is not a bit better than that pettifogger Krogstad, whom her husband dismissed——

Nora. But you won't reveal anything?

Krogstad. I can't afford to, Mrs. Helmer. In my first moments of despair I thought of doing so, but I can't afford it. I am not like the villains in romances; I have four children to support; they require food and clothing. For more than a year and a half I have been content with the most straitened circumstances, in order to retrieve my character. Now your husband has barred my way. Very well then, I will at any rate live, and live well, my children shall be well looked after——Here is the letter—this will tell him everything—and then he will have an avalanche hanging over him; he will be in my power, I can do what I like with him—make what demands I like; he won't dare to show fight; it will be the dismissed junior clerk that manages the bank——

Nora. You will do that?

Krogstad. That and nothing else.

Nora. That will be taking his future away from him.
Krogstad. He has taken my future away from me. Nora. This bank represents his life's work. And he is to give it up and become dependent on you.

Krogstad. He will do that for love of you. Nora. The fault is mine. And I did it for love of him.

Krogstad. Our deeds all have offspring—but the progeny does not always turn out as it ought. Nora. And you can do this thing.

Krogstad. I have four children. Nora. Mr. Krogstad, you won't do it. Krogstad. Here is the letter. Nora. Give it to me. Krogstad. To deliver? Nora. Yes, yes. Krogstad. Thanks; there is a letter-box at the door; it is perhaps safer—

Nora. You don't know what this will bring in its train.

Krogstad. The river? Nora. Yes, now there is nothing else for it. If I do not go under, my husband will.

Krogstad. I don't believe in romances, Mrs. Helmer.

Nora. You are a wretch! Yes, you are a wretch. I'm not afraid of you any longer, for now I have no choice—

Krogstad. Oh yes, you have—if only your husband yields—

Nora. He will not—he shall never be tempted to do so. Now I have courage for anything.

Krogstad. Bah—

Nora. Away from this home that you have ruined. Krogstad. I? Not you?
Nora. What I did was done for love of my father and my husband.

Krogstad. And what I am doing is done for love of my children.

Nora. This will bring no blessing upon your children.

Krogstad. You think not?

Nora. You will see what this deed brings in its train.

Krogstad. Bah!

Nora. You will see; you feel it yourself—you are cowardly—you dare not—you’re going, you’re taking the letter with you.

Krogstad (at the hall door). Bah! (Goes out.)

Nora. Wretch!—Ah—the letter. In the box.—There it lies.

(Mrs. Linde enters from the room on the left.)

Mrs. Linde. Hasn’t he gone?

Nora. Yes.

Mrs. Linde. And he won’t come back?

Nora. He will never come back any more.

Mrs. Linde. Nora, what is the matter with you?

What is there behind all this?

Nora. Nothing at all; but don’t tell my husband that he was here.

Mrs. Linde. Nora, you and he have some secret between you.

Nora (smiling). Yes, of course; a secret understanding.

Mrs. Linde. If you were really joking, you would not be so deadly pale.

Nora. Can you see that?

Mrs. Linde. Your husband will also be able to see it.

Nora. My husband shall not see anything; I have more faces than one.
Mrs. Linde. Nora, Nora, you are surrounding yourself with hollowness.
Nora. Oh, but isn’t it beautiful here?
Mrs. Linde. Without truth?
Nora. Truth? We may not think of that.
Mrs. Linde. But would it not be better if you could?
Nora. We must not ask too much; we must be satisfied with a little; soon I shall have to be satisfied with——
Mrs. Linde. With——?
Nora. With nothing.
Mrs. Linde. Nora, it is no use concealing anything from me. I understand it all. What you told me the first time. This secret with Krogstad——
Nora. Well, what then?
Mrs. Linde. I—I used to know him long ago. I have reasons for wanting to know this. Is he a bad, a despicable person?
Nora. I don’t know; I only know that he is terrible.
Mrs. Linde. From what do you know that?
Nora (opening the door to the hall). Look; there is a letter in the box.
Mrs. Linde. From him?
Nora. Yes.
Mrs. Linde. To your husband?
Nora. Yes.
Mrs. Linde. I must speak to Krogstad.
Nora. It is too late.
Mrs. Linde. Who knows?
Nora. Too late, I tell you—there lies the letter.
Mrs. Linde. Good-bye. (Goes out at the back.)
Nora. No, no; I’m dreaming. All this is a dream.
(Looks out into the hall.) Yes, there it lies. The whole story is in there.

(Helmer and Doctor Rank enter from the room on the right.)

Nora. Are you coming at last, Thorvald? I'm so glad you've come. Shame on you, Doctor, for keeping him so long——

Helmer. We had something to talk about. How is my little song-bird?

Nora. The song-bird is very well; you can see that, can't you?

Helmer. Yes, I think so too—— (To Rank.) But what can it be, then——?

Rank. H'm——

Nora. What? Which?

Helmer. Oh, nothing at all.

Nora. Oh yes, I know. Just think, Doctor Rank insists that I shall be ill.

Helmer. Yes, that's it; it's all nonsense. We be ill? Would this be a time—now that we have everything we have wished for so long? Now we are going to keep New Year's Eve in peace and harmony. All business is to wait till the new year.

Nora. Yes, isn't it, Thorvald?

Helmer. Yes, I won't touch either pen or book tonight. But, by-the-bye, I must just——

(Going to hall door.)

Nora. Where are you going?

Helmer. Just to see if there are any letters.

Nora. No, no, Thorvald——

Helmer. Why not?

Nora. No, no, I beg you not to—there are none there——

Helmer. Let me just see.
Nora (plays a few chords at the piano).

Helmer (stops at the door). Aha!

Nora. Do you know it?

Helmer. Will you really?

Nora. What shall I have for a reward?

Helmer. What do you want?

Nora. I'll tell you afterwards.

Helmer. No, now.

Nora. No, afterwards. Do you promise me?

Helmer. Is it something you have asked me before?

Nora. No, never. Now do you promise?

Helmer. Yes, I promise. (To Rank.) Now listen to this. But we must have cigarettes with it; real Turkish ones.

(He and Rank sit by the stove. Nora plays and sings Anitra's song from Peer Gynt.)

Mrs. Linde (enters from the hall). Oh, but what is this?

Nora. Don't interrupt.

Helmer. A picture of family life. What do you say to it?

Rank. Turkish, but pretty; is it not?

Nora. Sit down to the piano, Christina; go on playing. (She drapes herself in shawls and dances.)

Helmer. How lovely she is, Rank. Look at the fine curve of the neck. What grace in her movements, and she is quite unconscious of it.

Rank. A wife is a good thing.

Helmer. A wife like her.

Nora. Are you pleased?

Helmer. Thanks!

Nora. Was it pretty?

Helmer. Thanks, thanks!
The Maid (enters from the right). Dinner is ready.

Helmer. Good. But business first—

(Opens the door to the hall.)

Nora. Where are you going?

Helmer. To look in the letter-box.

Nora. No, no.

Helmer. There's a letter in it.

Nora. Don't take it out! Let it lie there.

Helmer. But, my dear Nora--; aha, it's from Krogstad.

Nora. Thorvald, if you take it out, I'll jump out of the window.

Helmer. But, Nora—

Rank. H'm, Helmer—

Helmer. What is it, Nora? What is the matter with you?

Nora. Oh, nothing, but I want you all to myself. No business this evening—oh, you know very well what he is writing about—

Helmer. Yes, exactly; but I should like to see all the same.—

Nora. You promised me what I asked. So now, you are not to open the letter-box this evening, nor to-morrow either—

Helmer. But, my dear little Nora—

Nora. He promised, Doctor, didn't he?

Rank. Yes, you are bound, Helmer.

Nora. No worries on holidays—and to-morrow you won't have any time for business; visits all day long, and the party upstairs in the evening—

Helmer. Very well, so be it. To-day and to-morrow I exist for you—but I give you notice—to-morrow, after midnight—
Mrs. Linde. Oh, you surely don’t work after midnight——

Helmer. I am accustomed to it, Mrs. Linde. But now let us go to dinner and drink to the old year and to all our hopes in the new.

Nora. Lead the way. Help me to take off all this finery, Christina.

Rank (to Helmer, as they go out). You see, she is not at all normal.

Helmer. I assure you, it is nothing but anxiety about me; she has a foolish terror of that man.

(They go out.)

Nora. Well?

Mrs. Linde. He’s gone away already.

Nora. I told you so.

Mrs. Linde. But he’ll be back to-morrow.

Nora. How will that help? Thorvald has seen the letter.

Mrs. Linde. He does not know what is in it; we must get hold of it.

Nora. Krogstad will write another.

Mrs. Linde. Is it so bad then?

Nora. No, no, certainly not; it is silly of me. Don’t let them see anything in your manner. Go in to them; I’ll manage myself.

(Mrs. Linde goes into the dining-room.)

Nora (taking off the shawls). Thorvald in his power? no, thank you, I didn’t save his life for that. But——no, no, there is no going back now. (Looks at the clock.) Five. Seven hours till midnight. Then twenty-four hours till the next midnight. Twenty-four and seven? Thirty-one hours to live. (She goes out.)
THIRD ACT

The same room. A lighted lamp on the table in front.

Mrs. Linde sits by the table and absently turns the pages of a book. She tries to read, but seems unable to fix her attention; she frequently listens and looks anxiously towards the hall; then looks at her watch.

Mrs. Linde (jumping up). What! Already? No, it is not——

Nora (enters in evening dress). What! Christina are you here?

Mrs. Linde. Oh, is that you, Nora?

Nora. Are you sitting here, Christina?

Mrs. Linde. Yes, I wanted to see you dressed; but I came too late. It was cold at my rooms, and so I stayed sitting here.

Nora. I see; but you must go again——

Mrs. Linde. Why?

Nora. Yes, yes, you must go.

Mrs. Linde. Have you left the party so early?

Nora. Yes, I could not bear it; it was so hot and stifling. (Helmer enters from the hall.)

Helmer. But, my dear Nora, what is the meaning of this? Are you leaving the party so early? And without saying good-bye? Ah, good evening, Mrs. Linde!

Nora. Yes, I had to. I knew Christina was here. She came to see my new dress.

Helmer. Well, but come up again; it looks so bad——

Nora. Yes, yes, I'll go up and fetch the children—but then—— Oh, I can't stay long, Thorvald; but you must stay; dance and amuse yourself—promise me that.

Helmer. Yes, yes—only do come. Good-night, Mrs. Linde—and excuse us.
Nora. Good-night, Christina—good-night, good-bye—you must not sit here any longer, with your weak eyes. Now you have seen my dress. Don't you think it suits me very well? When you think of me—then remember me as I am now. Good-night—good-bye,
Christina—good-bye——

Mrs. Linde. Good-night, my dear Nora.

Helmer. Come, come, we must go.

Nora. Good-night, good-bye.

(Helmer and Nora go out through the hall.)

Mrs. Linde (listens for a moment). What terrible mental anguish! And he does not see it. He understands nothing.—But the time—if he should not—(Listens.) Ah——(Opens the door into the hall; three soft knocks are heard on the outer door; Mrs. Linde opens it. Krogstad enters.)

Mrs. Linde. Come in here. There is no one here.

Krogstad. You have written to me. What does it mean?

Mrs. Linde. Yes, I had to; I could not see you at my rooms—there is nobody at home here.

Krogstad. Have we anything to say to each other?

Mrs. Linde. A great deal.

Krogstad. I should not have thought so.

Mrs. Linde. You have never understood me.

Krogstad. What was there to understand that was not perfectly plain? So many men are thrown over when a better match offers.

Mrs. Linde. Do you think I broke with you lightly?

Krogstad. Did you not?

Mrs. Linde. Do you really think so?

Krogstad. Why then did you write me that letter?

Mrs. Linde. Could I do anything else? Was not everything to be broken off between us?
Krogstad. Yes, for the sake of profit.

Mrs. Linde. Do you forget that I had a helpless mother and two little brothers? You had no prospects at all.

Krogstad. Did that give you the right to cast me off?

Mrs. Linde. I don't know. I have often asked myself whether I had the right.

Krogstad. When I had lost you, I seemed to lose all firm footing in life. Look at me now. I am a shipwrecked man clinging to a spar.

Mrs. Linde. Rescue may be at hand.

Krogstad. You can say that, when you are helping to loosen my hold?

Mrs. Linde. Do you think I shall do that?

Krogstad. Are you not in league with my persecutors?

Mrs. Linde. Oh? And why do you think that?

Krogstad. It won't be the first time that hatred is felt for one who has been wronged.

Mrs. Linde. Krogstad, you don't think that of me?

Krogstad. Then what am I to believe? Are you not taking the place that I have lost?

Mrs. Linde. Yes.

Krogstad. And could you do that if——?

Mrs. Linde. I have learnt prudence; life and bitter necessity have schooled me.

Krogstad. And life has taught me not to trust fine speeches.

Mrs. Linde. Then life has taught you a very sensible thing. But deeds you will trust?

Krogstad. What do you mean?

Mrs. Linde. You said you were a shipwrecked man, clinging to a spar.

Krogstad. I have good reason to say so.
Mrs. Linde. I too am shipwrecked, and clinging to a spar; I have no one to mourn for, no one to care for.

Krogstad. You make your own choice.

Mrs. Linde. Do not let us dispute about that; for me there was no choice left.

Krogstad. Well, what then?

Mrs. Linde. Nils, how if we two shipwrecked people could join hands?

Krogstad. What do you mean?

Mrs. Linde. Two on one raft have a better chance than if each clings to a separate spar.

Krogstad. Christina!

Mrs. Linde. What do you think brought me here?

Krogstad. Could it be——?

Mrs. Linde. I must have work, or I can't bear to live; I have worked all my life, and it has been my one great happiness. Now I stand alone, aimless and forlorn. There is no happiness in working for one's self. Nils, give me somebody and something to work for.

Krogstad. I cannot believe in all this. It is a woman's romantic craving for self-sacrifice.

Mrs. Linde (smiling). H'm, I am the last person to be called romantic.

Krogstad. And you could—? Do you know all that is said about me?

Mrs. Linde. You said that with me you would have been another man.

Krogstad. Well——?

Mrs. Linde. Is it too late?

Krogstad. Christina, have you thought what you are doing? Will you—? Will you*——?

* Krogstad here changes from the formal De to the intimate du (thou).
Mrs. Linde. I need some one to be a mother to, and your children need a mother. You need me, and I need you. You told me you wanted to show the world that some one will trust you in a post of confidence. I will.

Krogstad. Now, Christina, I shall raise myself.—Ah, I forgot—; the whole thing is impossible—

Mrs. Linde. Why?

Krogstad. You don't know—; I have taken a step against this house—

Mrs. Linde. I know.

Krogstad. You know it?

Mrs. Linde. And I know to what lengths despair can drive a man.

Krogstad. Oh, if I could only undo it!

Mrs. Linde. You could. Your letter is still in the box.

Krogstad. Are you sure?

Mrs. Linde. Yes; but—

Krogstad. Now I understand. You want to save your friend at any price. Say it out—is that your idea?

Mrs. Linde. Nils, a woman who has once sold herself for the sake of others, does not do so again.

Krogstad. The letter shall be got back again.

Mrs. Linde. No, no.

Krogstad. There is still time. I shall wait here, ask for it, say that it is about my dismissal—but that I have accepted the situation—

Mrs. Linde. You must not recall it.

Krogstad. But wasn't it about the letter that you got me to come here?

Mrs. Linde. Yes, in my first moment of terror; but a day has passed since then. Helmer must know everything. This unhappy secret will undermine their marriage if it is allowed to remain. There must be perfect frankness. These shifts and subterfuges lead to ruin.

Krogstad. Christina, your friend has not told you everything.

Mrs. Linde. Is there more than the debt——?

Krogstad. H’m——

Mrs. Linde. Make haste! Go, go!—some one is coming downstairs. Wait for me at the door [in the street]; you must see me to my door.

Krogstad. I shall wait; and you will see. Oh, Christina, thanks, thanks, you have made a new man of me. (He goes out quickly.)

Mrs. Linde (putting on her outdoor things). He thanks me, and it is I—; now there is work to do——

(Nora enters with the two elder children. The Nurse has the youngest on her arm).

Nora. What; are you still here?

Mrs. Linde. Good-night; I have a great deal to talk to you about to-morrow.

Nora. To-morrow——!

Mrs. Linde. Believe me, Nora, it is a good thing to speak out——

Nora. Yes, yes. Good-night.

Mrs. Linde. Good-night.

Nora. A thousand times good-night. Good-bye.

(Mrs. Linde goes out.)

Nora. Put them to bed, Anna—they are so tired and sleepy—Oh, look after them well. What do you say? Stay a little while with mamma? No, no—that won’t do—you can’t be with mamma—Good-night—oh, once more—Good-night—good-night—there—now you must go in—good-night, all of you——

(The Nurse goes out with the children.)
Nora. Oh, never to see them again! Never—never—

Helmer (enters). There—now it is over. Have they gone to bed?

Nora. Yes, directly.

Helmer. You are tired?

Nora. Oh, yes, a little.

Helmer. After this my little Nora must take care of herself. It will be good to take a long rest, won’t it?

Nora. Yes, I almost think it will.

Helmer. Only “almost”?

Nora. Yes, yes, it will be good.

Rank (enters). May I come in so late as this?

Helmer. Oh, is it you? Yes, come in.

Rank. I didn’t get a chance of saying good-bye to you upstairs, and as I knew you were a pair of night-birds——

Helmer. Yes, I have a couple of hours’ work to do yet. Well, you seemed to be enjoying yourself this evening.

Rank. Yes, why not? One doesn’t like to forego one’s last chance.

Helmer. Last? Why should it be the last?

Rank. Why? Ah, you must ask certain mysterious powers about that. But it is the last, so far as I am concerned.

Helmer. But my dear Rank——

Rank. I feel it. There’s no help for it. I’m going home to bed now and shall not get up again. No, no, it is so; I am perfectly clear upon it. That is why I wanted to say good-bye——

Helmer. Oh, but of course I shall come and see you every day——
Rank. You're not to do that—not on any account. I won't have it. There's something ugly about a deathbed. A sick-room is hideous; the poisoned air, the patient's failing strength, his altered appearance, his drawn, yellow skin, glassy eyes—. No, no, promise me you won't come, Helmer. I don't want to be associated in your memory with such impressions.

Helmer. Do you think it will be protracted?

Rank. Hardly. I was going to say, unfortunately. Yes, isn't it strange how we hang on to our wretched lives? I who am a doctor and could so easily put an end to the whole business; a few drops out of a bottle—; a slit with the lancet here over the artery—

Helmer. But, Rank—what are you thinking of—

Rank. I haven't the courage to do it; I swear I haven't the courage. I prefer to lie and suffer and die by inches. But at any rate there may be some interesting observations to be made. One can't very well experiment with other patients toward the end. There is never anything definite to be learnt from them. But on one's self—yes, my friends, that is the only thing I have left to look forward to. That, and my good cigars; I can smoke them. Well, good-bye now, and thanks for all your kindness. May you have a long life before you. Now, now, Mrs. Helmer—don't let us be sentimental, don't let us have any scenes—Good-bye—

Helmer. Rank, I shall come and see you.

Rank. You won't get in. Hang it, man, what have you got to do with death—at present? You are a healthy, happy man—no, no, it's not for you to see. Good-bye then, and may it be many years before you follow me. (He goes out.)

Helmer. This will be a hard blow for us, Nora!

Nora. Yes.
A DOLL'S HOUSE

HELMER. He had so grown into our lives, I can't realise that he is gone. He and his sufferings and his loneliness formed a sort of cloudy background to the sunshine of our happiness. Well, perhaps it's best as it is. At any rate for him. And perhaps for us too. (He goes into the hall and takes a key from his pocket.)

NORA. Thorvald—what are you doing?

HELMER. Emptying the letter-box. Why, how is this? Has anyone been at the lock?

NORA. The lock—?

HELMER. I'm sure of it. What does it mean? I can't think that the servants—here is a bit of a hair-pin—Nora, it's one of yours—

NORA. It must have been the children—

HELMER. Yes, of course—you must break them of such tricks. H'm, h'm—there, I've got it open.—Just see how they've accumulated.

NORA. Are you going to work now?

HELMER. Yes, I must. I shall not be able to sleep anyhow—I can't get what Rank told us out of my head. There, there, my sweet little Nora; I see it has shaken you too. But you must struggle against it; it is not good for you. You must be happy and joyous, my little song-bird. Is not that what you were born for? It did not come upon us unexpectedly. We have long been prepared. And, as I said, perhaps it's best as it is—for us. Now we two are thrown entirely upon each other. There, there, don't be so moved, Nora; there is something unlovely in it. We will not let our happiness be taken from us. Now we have everything; an independent position. How I am looking forward to beginning my work; to be my own independent master—to work with free hands.

NORA. Yes, yes, you shall, Thorvald!
Helmer. I'll go into my room for a while. Goodnight, my sweet little Nora; don't sit up too long. You are badly in want of rest.

Nora. Yes, I intend to—go now, Thorvald; goodnight; I shall soon have finished.

Helmer. Good-night, my little lark. And to-morrow we begin a new life. Good-night; sleep well. Now I shall read my letters. (He goes with the letters in his hand into his room.)

Nora (looks around with wild eyes; takes a step towards Helmer's room, but stops again; in a low voice.) Thorvald, Thorvald, Thorvald! Never to see him again! The children; never to see them again. The black, icy water. Oh, can I do it! Oh, if it were over! What's that? Has he opened it? Is he reading it?—Goodbye, my home, my home, goodbye to him and my little ones!

(She has thrown a large shawl over her head and is hurrying out by the hall. At the same moment Helmer flings his door open, and stands there with an open letter in his hand.)

Helmer. Nora!
Nora (with a shriek). Ah——!

Helmer. Nora, what is this——
Nora. I'm going—you see that I'm going.

Helmer (holds her back). Where do you want to go? Do you know what this wretch writes?

Nora. Yes, but kill me! Strike me!

Helmer. Nora!

Nora. Let me go—I'm going!

Helmer. Awful! Is what he writes true? No, no, it is impossible that this can be true.

Nora. What are you going to do to me?

Helmer. Wretched woman; what have you done!
Nora. Let me get away. Let me go.

Helmer (locks the door). I don't want any melodramatic airs. Here you shall stay and give an account of yourself.—Do you know what you have done?—Answer! Do you know?

Nora. Yes, now I know.

Helmer. Oh! what an awful awakening! During all these eight years—she who was my pride and my joy—a hypocrite, a liar—worse, worse—a criminal—oh, the unfathomable hideousness of it—ugh, ugh—

(Nora says nothing.)

Helmer. I ought to have foreseen it, guessed it. All your father's want of principle—be silent!—all your father's want of principle you have inherited. No religion, no morality, no sense of duty. How I am punished for screening him! I did it for your sake, and I am rewarded like this.

Nora. Yes,—like this.

Helmer. You have destroyed my whole happiness, my whole future. I am in the power of a scoundrel. He can do whatever he pleases with me, demand whatever he chooses; and I must submit.

Nora. When I am out of the world, you will be free.

Helmer. Oh, no fine phrases. Your father, too, was always ready with them. What good would it do, if you were gone? None. If he publishes the story, no one will doubt that I was in collusion with you. People will think I egged you on. You have undermined my whole position, my whole life's work. I must hold my tongue and serve him, or else I shall be ruined. Do you understand now what you have done to me?

Nora. Yes.

Helmer. The thing is so incredible, I can't grasp it. But we must come to an understanding. Take that shawl off! Take it off, I say. I must try to pacify him in one way or another—the matter must be hushed up. There must be no outward change in our way of life—no outward change, you understand. The children cannot be left in your care; I dare not trust them to you. Oh, to have to say this to one I have loved so tenderly! But that is a thing of the past; henceforward there can be no question of happiness, but merely of saving the ruins, the shreds, the show. (A ring; Helmer starts.) What's that? So late! Can it be the worst—! Can he—! Hide yourself—

(Nora stands motionless. He goes to the door and opens it.)

The Maid (in the hall). Here is a letter for you, ma'am.

Helmer. Give it here. (He seizes the letter and shuts the door.) Yes, from him. Look there.

Nora. Read it.

Helmer. I have hardly the courage. I fear the worst. We may both be lost, both you and I. Ah! I must know. (Hastily tears the letter open; reads a few lines; with a cry of joy.) Nora!

(Nora looks inquiringly at him.)

Helmer. Nora!—Oh! I must read it again. Yes, yes, it is so. You are saved, Nora, you are saved.

Nora. How, saved?

Helmer. Look here. He sends you back your promissory note. He writes that he regrets and apologises, that a happy turn in his life—Oh, what matter what he writes. We are saved, Nora! There is nothing to witness against you. Oh, Nora, Nora—; but first to get rid of this hateful thing. I'll just see. (Glances at the I. O. U.) No, I will not look at it. The whole thing shall be nothing but a dream to me. (Tears the I. O. U. and both letters in pieces; throws the pieces into the fire and watches them burn.) There! it's gone! Oh, Nora, Nora, what terrible days these must have been for you.

Nora. I have thought a great deal during these last few days, Thorvald.

Helmer. And in your agony you saw no other outlet but—no, no; we won't think of that horror. We will only rejoice and repeat—it's over, it's over! Don't you hear, Nora? You don't seem able to grasp it. Yes, it's over. What is this stony look on your face? Oh, Nora, I see what it is; you don't believe that I can forgive you. Everything is forgiven; I swear it. I know that what you did was all for love of me.

Nora. That is true.

Helmer. You loved me as a wife should love her husband. It was only the means that, with your lack of knowledge, you misjudged. Do you think I love you the less because you cannot do without guidance? No, no; lean on me; I will counsel you, and guide you. I should be no true man if this very womanly helplessness did not make you doubly dear in my eyes. You mustn't dwell upon the hard things I said in my first moment of terror, when the world seemed to be falling about our ears. I have forgiven you, Nora—I swear I have forgiven you.

Nora. I thank you for your forgiveness.

(Goes out through the open door on the right.)

Helmer. No, stay; where are you going?

Nora (in the room at the side). I must collect myself. Only a moment.

Helmer. Yes, collect yourself, my scared little songbird. I have broad wings to shield you. Our home is lovely and cosy, Nora; here you are safe; here I can have you for myself alone. You will be to me like a dove that has escaped unhurt from the claws of the hawk; I shall bring your poor beating heart to rest; believe me, Nora, very soon. I shall not need to tell you again that I forgive you. Soon you will feel for yourself that it is true. Oh, this very thing has made you doubly dear to me. How could I find it in my heart to drive you away, or even to reproach you? Oh, you don’t know a true man’s heart, Nora. There is something indescribably sweet and soothing to a man in having forgiven his wife, honestly forgiven her from the bottom of his heart. Has she not become his property in a double sense? She is as though born again. She has become, so to speak, at once his wife and his child. That is what you shall be to me in the future, my bewildered, helpless darling. Don’t be afraid, Nora; only open your heart to me, and I will be both will and conscience to you.—Why, what’s this? You have changed your dress?

Nora (in everyday dress). Yes, Thorvald; now I have changed my dress.

Helmer. But why?

Nora. I shall not sleep to-night.

Helmer. But, Nora dear—

Nora (looking at her watch). It’s not so late yet. Sit down, Thorvald; you and I have much to say to each other. (She sits at one side of the table.)

Helmer. Nora, what does this mean? Your stony look again.

Nora. Sit down. It will take some time. I have much to talk over with you.

(Helmer sits opposite to her.)

Helmer. You alarm me, Nora. I don’t understand you.

Nora. No, that’s just it. You don’t understand me; and I have never understood you—till to-night. No, don't interrupt. Only listen to what I say.—We must come to a final settlement, Thorvald.

Helm. How do you mean?

Nor. Does not one thing strike you as we sit here?

Helm. What should strike me?

Nor. We have been married eight years. Does it not strike you that this is the first time we two, you and I, man and wife, have talked together seriously?

Helm. Seriously! What do you call seriously?

Nor. During eight whole years, and more—ever since the day we first met—we have never exchanged one serious word about serious things.

Helm. Was I always to trouble you with the cares you could not help me to bear?

Nor. I am not talking of cares. I say that we have never yet set ourselves seriously to get to the bottom of anything.

Helm. Why, my dearest Nora, what have you to do with serious things?

Nor. There we have it! You have never understood me.—I have had great injustice done me, Thorvald; first by father, and then by you.

Helm. What! By your father and me?—By us, who have loved you more than all the world?

Nor. Oh, you haven't ever loved me. You never loved anything but your own infatuation [only thought it amusing to be in love with me].

Helm. Why, Nora, what a thing to say!

Nor. When I was a little girl of four or five, father said I had such an extraordinary desire to learn French; and he made me learn long pieces by heart; then he said I had a rare talent for writing verse, and I wrote many verses. But I had no wish either to learn French or to write verse; only I believed I had, because father had said so. Then he told me that his old-fashioned furniture and high-backed chairs with leather seats were the most handsome; and I thought they were. Then he said his high, white stock and his gold-headed cane gave him a distinguished appearance, and I thought they did so. Father used to tell me all his opinions, and I held the same opinions. If I had others I said nothing about them, because he wouldn't have liked it. He used to call me his doll, and played with me as I played with my dolls. Then I came to you, Thorvald—

Helmer. You came to me?

Nora. Well, I mean I passed from father's hands into yours. You didn't want me to have anything to do with French, because of all the immoral books; nor did you think it the right thing for women to write verse. But you were fond of music, and you liked me to recite monologues that we had heard at the theatre, and dress myself up in picturesque costumes. You arranged our house according to your taste, and I got the same tastes—or I pretended to, I don't know which; or both ways, perhaps; sometimes one and sometimes the other. You and father have done me a great wrong. It is your fault that I have got into the habit of lying and that my life has come to nothing.

Helmer. You are unreasonable and ungrateful, Nora! Have you not been happy here?

Nora. No. I thought I was; but I never was.

Helmer. Not—not happy!

Nora. No; only merry, cheerful. Our home has been a doll's house. Here I have been your doll, just as I used to be father's. And the children, in their turn, have been my dolls. And I thought it was amusing to be played with by you, just as I thought it amusing to play with them. That has been our marriage, Thorvald.
HELMER. There is some truth in what you say, exaggerated and overstrained though it be. But henceforth it shall be different. Play-time is over; now comes the time for education.

NORA. Whose education? Mine, or the children's?

HELMER. Both, my dear Nora.

NORA. Oh, Thorvald, you are not the man to teach me to be a fit wife for you.

HELMER. And you can say that?

NORA. And I—how have I prepared myself to educate our children?

HELMER. Nora!

NORA. Did you not say yourself just now, you dared not trust them to me?

HELMER. In my first excitement. Why should you dwell upon that?

NORA. You spoke the truth. That problem is beyond me. There is another to be solved first—I must try to educate myself. You are not the man to help me in that. I must set about it alone. And that is why I am leaving you.

HELMER (jumping up). What—do you mean to say——?

NORA. I must stand alone if I am ever to know myself and my surroundings; so I cannot stay here.

HELMER. Nora, Nora!

NORA. I am going this evening. It is no use postponing such things. I daresay Christina will take me in for to-night——

HELMER. You are mad. I shall not allow it. I forbid it.

NORA. It is of no use your forbidding me anything now. I shall take with me what belongs to me. From you I will accept nothing, either now or afterwards.
Helmer. What madness is this!
Nora. To-morrow I shall go home—I mean to what was my home. It will be easier for me to find some opening there.
Helmer. Oh, in your blind inexperience——
Nora. I must try to gain experience, Thorvald!
Helmer. To forsake your home, your husband, and your children! And you don’t consider what the world will say?
Nora. I can pay no heed to that. I only know that I must do it.
Helmer. This is monstrous! Can you forsake your holiest duties in this way?
Nora. What do you consider my holiest duties?
Helmer. Do I need to tell you that? Your duties to your husband and your children.
Nora. Have I not other duties equally sacred?
Helmer. Not in the first rank. What duties do you mean?
Nora. My duties towards myself.
Helmer. Before all else you are a wife and mother.
Nora. That I no longer believe. I believe that before all else I am a human being—or that I should try to become one. I know that most people agree with you, Thorvald, or that they say something of that sort. But henceforth I can’t be satisfied with what people say, and what is in books. I must think things out for myself, and try to get clear about them.
Helmer. Are you not clear about your place in your own home? Have you not an infallible guide in such things? Have you not religion?
Nora. Oh, Thorvald, I don’t really know what religion is.
Helmer. What do you mean?
Nora. I know nothing but what Pastor Hansen told me when I was confirmed. He explained that religion was this and that. When I get away from all this and stand alone, I will look into that matter too. I will see whether what he taught me is right, or, at any rate, whether it is right for me.

Helmer. Oh, this is unheard of! And from so young a woman! But if religion cannot keep you right, let me appeal to your conscience—for I suppose you have some moral feeling? Or, answer me: perhaps you have none?

Nora. Ah, Thorvald, what shall I answer? [it's not easy to say]. I really don't know—I am all at sea about these things. I only know that I think quite differently from you about moral questions. I hear, too, that the law is on your side; but I can't believe it. I can't understand that the law is right in what concerns me. That a woman has no right to spare her dying father, or to save her husband's life!

Helmer. You talk like a child. You don't understand the society in which you live.

Nora. No, I do not. But now I shall try to learn. I must make up my mind which is right—society or I.

(She goes into the room on the right and fetches her hat and cloak.)

Helmer. Nora, you are ill; you are feverish; I almost think you are out of your senses.

Nora. I have never felt so much clearness and certainty as to-night.

Helmer. You are clear and certain enough to forsake husband and children?

Nora. Yes.

Helmer. Then there is only one explanation possible.

Nora. What is that?
Helmer. You no longer love me.
Nora. Yes, Thorvald, that is so.
Helmer. Nora! Oh, oh!
Nora. I will not hide it from you—I do not love you any longer. That is why I am going.
Helmer (mastering himself with difficulty). Are you clear and certain on this point too?
Nora. Yes, quite.
Helmer. And can you also make clear to me how I have forfeited your love?
Nora. (Ah, Thorvald, the point is: you have not forfeited). I can. You forfeited my love this evening, when I discovered that you had never loved me as I loved you. You forfeited it when I saw you were not the man I had imagined—when I could no longer look up to you as an exalted and superior being; for you are not one.
Helmer. And how did I disclose all this?
Nora. I will tell you. That which you call my crime, my forging my father's name to save your life, this secret has been my joy and pride, until my eyes were opened to the consequences that might result from it. I have gone through a week of deadly terror.
Helmer. I can well understand that.
Nora. But you do not understand why. Or can you tell me?
Helmer. Well, you had no need to fear punishment and disgrace. You must have known that I should employ every means of saving you; that I should have been compelled to submit to any conditions——
Nora. H'm. What then do you think it was that made me want to die?
Helmer. You were afraid of my anger.
Nora. No, Thorvald, I wanted to die in order to hinder what I so firmly believed your gratitude, your love and your manly spirit would prompt you to do. It never for a moment occurred to me that you would think of submitting to that man's conditions, that you would agree to direct your actions by the will of another. I was convinced that you would say to him, "Make it known to the whole world"; and that then——

Helmer. Well? I should give you up to punishment and disgrace.

Nora. No; then I firmly believed that you would come forward, take everything upon yourself, and say, "I am the guilty one"——

Helmer. Nora!

Nora. You mean I would never have accepted such a sacrifice? No, of course not. But what would my word have been worth in opposition to yours? I so firmly believed that you would sacrifice yourself for me——"don't listen to her," you would say——"she is not responsible; she is out of her senses"——you would say that it was love of you—you would move heaven and earth. I thought you would get Doctor Rank to witness that I was mad, unhinged, distracted. I so firmly believed that you would ruin yourself to save me. That is what I dreaded, and therefore I wanted to die.

Helmer. Oh, Nora, Nora!

Nora. And how did it turn out? No thanks, no outburst of affection, not a shred of a thought of saving me. Only reproaches—sneers at my father—petty terrors—tyrannical abuse of a defenceless victim.

Helmer. Yes, yes——

Nora. And then, the very moment the danger was over, it seemed to you as though nothing had happened. I was again your lark, your doll, whom you would take twice as much care of in future, because she was so weak and fragile. Thorvald, in that moment you stood revealed to me as [it burst upon me that I had been living here with] a strange man; and with a strange man I cannot continue to live [that is what cannot continue].

Helmer. Yes, yes, yes, an abyss has opened between us. But, Nora, Nora, can it never be filled up?

Nora. As I now am, I am no wife for you.

Helmer. I have strength to become another man.

Nora. Perhaps—when your doll is taken away from you.

Helmer. To part—to part from you! No, Nora, no; I can't grasp the thought.

Nora. The more reason for the thing to happen!

(She fetches her travelling-bag from the room on the right.)

Helmer. Nora, Nora, [not now! Wait till to-morrow.]

Nora. I can't spend the night in a strange man's house.

H. . . brother and sister.

N. Phrases. You know very well—that wouldn't long be the case.]

Nora (Putting on her outdoor things). Good-bye, Thorvald. No, I won't go to the children. I know they are in better hands than mine. As I now am, I can be nothing to them.

Helmer. But some time, Nora—some time—?

Nora. How can I tell? I have no idea what will become of me.

Helmer. But you are my wife, now and always.

Nora. Listen to me, Thorvald—when a wife leaves her husband's house, as I am doing, I have heard that in the eyes of the law he is free from all duties towards her. At any rate, I release you from all duties. You must not feel yourself bound by any tie, any more than I shall. There must be perfect freedom on both sides. There, I give you back your ring. Give me mine.

Helmer. That too?

Nora. That too.

Helmer. Here it is.

Nora. Very well. Now it is all over. I lay the keys here. The servants know about everything in the house—better than I do. To-morrow, when I have started, Christina will come to pack up the things I brought with me from home. I will have them sent after me.

Helmer. All over! All over! Nora, will you never think of me again?

Nora. When a woman has lived with a man for eight years, I don't think he will ever become quite a stranger to her. I shall often think of you, and the children, and this house.

Helmer. Nora, may I write to you?

Nora. No,—never! You must not.

Helmer. But I must send you—

Nora. Nothing, nothing.

Helmer. I must help you if you need it.

Nora. Nothing, nothing, I say. I take nothing from strangers.

Helmer. I see it well; I have become a stranger to you.

Nora. You have, as I to you. And therefore, good-bye!

Helmer. Nora—can I never be more than a stranger to you?

Nora. Oh, Thorvald, then the miracle of miracles would have to happen—

Helmer. What is this miracle?
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Nora. Both of us would have to change so that—Oh, Thorvald, I no longer believe in miracles.

Helmer. But I believe in them. Tell me! We must so change that—?

Nora. That communion between us shall be a marriage. Good-bye.

(She rapidly picks up her travelling-bag, nods and goes out.)

Helmer (sinks into a chair by the door). Nora! Nora!—The miracle of miracles—?!

II

FROM THE SECOND ACT

N. People are sympathetic towards those who are ill.—What are the children doing?

A. Oh, poor mites, they're amusing themselves as well as they can.

N. Ask for me. If I can't have them so much with me in future—

A. Little children get used to anything.

N. If I went quite away from them, do you believe they would forget me—

A. Gracious me quite away—

Nora. Hasn't your daughter become a stranger to you—

A. How does Mrs. Nora know—

N. That you have had a child—I have known that since I was twelve or thirteen—otherwise you could not have been my nurse. Oh, it must be terrible to be torn away from one's dear ones.
A. We poor people don't look at it in that way. My little Nora was like a child of my own——
N. You must never leave the little ones, promise me that.
A. Did I not look after Nora, when she was a little girl and had no mother but me.
N. Yes, yes, they are in good hands with you.

No— How kind of you to come.
Mrs. L. I have come to thank your husband.
N. Appointed.
Mrs. L. Yes—Perhaps he is not at home.
N. Is so busy. But now you must help me. Look here. Fancy ball at Stenborg's overhead on third floor. I am to appear as a Neapolitan girl and dance the tarantella—learnt it on the spot—promised Torvald—Can you help——
Mrs. L. Will try—But I've quite forgotten to thank you for the pleasant evening yesterday——
NORA. Oh, Torvald has the art of making everything so pleasant.
Mrs. L. You too—But tell me, is Doctor Rank always so serious as he was last evening——
N. He suffers from a dreadful illness—But yesterday it was certainly marked——
Mrs. L. He comes here very often.
N. Every day—he is quite one of the family; I don't think he could get on without us.

N. I assure you. But, Doctor R.? I'm certain that if I asked him——
Mrs. L. N. N. behind your husband's back—why don't you speak to your husband——
N. Oh, you don’t understand it all, don’t know Torvald.
Mrs. L. Not Dr. R. on any account.
N. Would never occur to me; although I am sure he would do it.
Mrs. L. But you must get clear of it. This secrecy is likely to undermine all truthfulness in your relations with your husband—
N. And you can say that. Yes, I must get clear of it. Tell me, when everything is paid, one gets back the paper?
Mrs. L. Yes, of course.
N. Oh, to have money, Christina—
Mrs. L. Would not your husband—?
N. Oh, there are many that he— (Humming.) But courage—leap into it, not creep—
Mrs. L. But no more secrets from your husband, N.
N. Pooh! a husband need not know everything. Hush, here he comes. [Go into the nursery, dear. Torvald doesn’t like to see dressmaking.] (Goes into the hall.) Oh, is that you, Torvald dear—how cold you are. Haven’t you been frozen at the Bank? Well, that’s all right.

H. —If R. comes, he will find me in the inner office—
(Goes into his room.)

N. Doctor R—Yes, it’s his time for coming—It must be. Now he will soon get the letter—There’s a ring; that’s he. No, it’s not he—Ah, Doctor, it’s you. Bring in the lamp, Ellen—Come here, Doctor; I think my husband has something to do—

R. One can’t call an ugly thing by pretty names. Well, one has to go some day. But to suffer thus for another's sin. Where's the justice of it? And yet you can trace in every family an inexorable retribution. It is my father's wild oats that my poor spine must do penance for.

N. But, my dear Doctor R—You may live a long while yet.

R. H'm, I'm quite clear about it. This is the last Christmas I shall spend in this house. I wonder how things will look in a year's time——

N. Ah, if one could know that.

R.—Well, the absent are soon forgotten——

R. You see, you see.

N. Only to put my costume in order. Now don't be angry, dear Dr. R. Fie, you were so unfriendly to her last evening. Do be good; you are our first and best friend, you know that—To-morrow you shall see how beautiful I shall be at the ball—R., now I'll show you something. Look here.

R. What is it.

N. Look.

R. Silk stockings.

N. Flesh-coloured—No, no, no, you must only look at the feet.—Oh, well, I suppose you may look at the rest too.

R. Do you think those stockings will fit you.

N. Why not——

R. Oh, I didn't know——

N. (hits him lightly on the cheek with the stockings.)

For shame.

R. Nora—Mrs. Helmer—when one is going to die.

N. You mustn't die and leave us; you must go on being Torvald's and my best and dearest friend——
R. Oh, I have never had an opportunity of proving my friendship to you. I have only accepted what you have lavished upon me, comfort, kindness—I had almost said happiness—

N. And if I were to ask you for—no——

R. For what?

N. For a great proof of your friendship?

R. Oh, do so, N.; you don't know how gladly I would leave behind something—a remembrance; something that would keep me from oblivion. But what is it?

N. Oh, no, I cannot—Now that I am to say it, it seems to me an impossibility—I don't know how you will judge of me——

R. Then I will tell you something. You shall know now what you have never guessed; have never been able to guess—A dying man, as I am, may speak out; I have kept silence hitherto.

N. Dr. R., keep silence still.

R. No, you shall hear it; I have loved you, N., loved you ever since I have known you. Every moment I have passed with you has been like a great indescribable happiness, the only happiness I have known.

N. Not so loud—some one might hear you.

R. Helmer himself may hear every single word I have addressed to you; when I am gone he shall know all; but you shall hear it now, so that you may turn to me with full confidence. I will only tell you this. No one has loved you more deeply than I.

Nora (going to the door). Ellen, bring the lamp.

R. Nora——

Nora. Oh, my dear Dr. R—that was too bad of you——

R. What?

N. Why should you have told me that. It was all so nice; it was so unnecessary——
R. What do you mean? Did you know—
   (The Maid enters with the lamp.)

Nora. Thanks. Put it on the table there—
   (Exit Maid.)

R. Nora, I ask you, did you know—

N. Oh, I don’t know what I knew; one has an idea, or—no, I don’t know at all—

R. Well, you know now that you can count upon me—

Now go on—

N. Go on—now?

R.—Oh, let me do for you whatever a man can.

N.—You can do nothing for me now—

R. Not now? Now that you know—

N.—Above all, not now. Oh, Heaven, why can’t a man understand—

R. Yes, N., I ought to have understood.

N. Too late.

R. Ought I to go—for ever.

N. No, you mustn’t. You must come and go as you’ve always done. Torvald can’t do without you.

R. But you—

N. Oh, I, I—but now you must go in to Torvald for a while—

R. Are you angry?

N. No; but now you must go to him. He’s waiting for you in the inner office.

R. When you remember what I have said to you, you must also bear in mind that I am a dying man.

   (He goes into Helmer’s room.)

N. It was best thus. No obligation to anyone. He won’t come. Nothing will happen.—

   (She is going into the room on the left; at the same moment The Maid opens the door into the hall.)

Maid (softly). Please, ma’am.
N. What is it.
M. The gentleman who came to see Mr. Helmer yesterday—
N. What gentleman; there were so many—
M. He gave his card—
N. Ah—where is he—
M. He came up the back stair, he wanted to speak to you alone, ma'am.
N. Oh, Heaven, now; I—I can't—
M. He said he wouldn't go until he had spoken to you.
N. Then let him come in; Ellen, don't say anything; it's a surprise for my husband—
M. Oh, yes, ma'am, I understand—
N. Oh, this dreadful thing—
{(She slips the bolt of H.'s door.) (The Maid opens the door for K. and shuts it after him.)

Kr. A money transaction of this kind with a minor is not even strictly speaking binding—
N. Is it not? Well, well, it's all the same, I shall pay nevertheless.
Kr. Good, good; but what I was going to say was, if you have any desperate scheme in your head—
N. What if I have?
Kr. Put all that out of your head. Were you perhaps thinking of going away secretly—
N. How do you know that? Who has told you—
Kr. Or perhaps of something worse—
N. Oh, don't speak of it—that terrible—
Kr. Yes, it must be terrible, especially for a lady so delicately brought up. The icy water, black, deep—
N. How do you know all this—
And next spring when the ice melts to come up again—ugly, unrecognisable—I hadn’t the courage, and it was in summer time, too—and now it is midwinter——

Never—I should never have courage to do it.

Besides, it would be very foolish. You have a happy home, a husband and children of whom you are fond. A number of good friends, respect from everyone—and your life before you.

Oh, yes, yes—, life might be so lovely——

Therefore you must not throw it away thoughtlessly; I am afraid I frightened you too much yesterday, and so I want to talk to you now—to prepare you——

For what?

I have been thinking more carefully over these matters. My position is not such that I can let go the hold I have now obtained over Helmer—I shall not abuse it, if he is reasonable.

What will you do.

This course is not my choice; it is your husband’s. I would have preferred to content myself with regaining my position, step by step. That has not succeeded; very well; with this piece of paper I have my good friend T. H. in my pocket;

You never will;

I shall; within three months I shall be in the Bank’s service again. Before a year is out I shall be the manager’s right hand. He won’t dare to show fight. It won’t be T. H., but Nils K., that manages the Joint Stock Bank.

Do you know that this is his life’s work; he will never give it up; he will have his liberty and no one over him.

Doesn’t concern me—for your sake he will have to yield——
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Nora. Very well; now I have courage enough for anything.

K. Bah—you haven't—I have seen that much—Drown yourself in the cold water?

N. I shall do it—

K. What would be the use of it; I have him in my pocket all the same—I can hold your reputation over him.—Look, here is the letter.

N. Give it to me.

K. To deliver—

N. Yes, yes—

K. Thanks; but perhaps it will be safer if I—

N. You can't see him; you can't speak to him now—It is a relief to me to know that you won't do anything foolish—

N. He's going; he's changed his mind—ah—in the letter-box—

FROM THE THIRD ACT

H. What is it you won't have? There is nothing you may refuse, if I want it. Am I not your husband? What is it you won't have?

N. Nothing. Your wishes are mine.

H. Oh, what a brute—what a madman I am. But the thought of your being mine sometimes turns my head (kisses her hands again and again). Can you forgive me, my dearest Nora—can you—I swear to you—

(A knock at the outer door.)

N. (with a scream). Who is that coming?
The play is to be like a picture of life. Belief undermined. But it does not do to say so. "The Orphanage"—for the sake of others. They are to be happy—but this too is only an appearance—Everything is ghosts.—

A leading point: She has been a believer and romantic—this is not entirely obliterated by the standpoint reached later—"Everything is ghosts."

Marriage for external reasons, even when these are religious or moral, brings a Nemesis upon the offspring.
She, the illegitimate child, can be saved by being married to—the son—but then—?

He was dissipated and his health was shattered in his youth; then she appeared, the religious enthusiast; she saved him; she was rich. He was going to marry a girl who was considered unworthy. He had a son by his wife, then he went back to the girl; a daughter.—

These women of the present day, ill-used as daughters, as sisters, as wives, not educated according to their gifts, prevented from following their inclination, deprived of their inheritance, embittered in temper—it is these who furnish the mothers of the new generation. What is the result?

The key-note is to be: The prolific growth of our intellectual life, in literature, art, etc.—and in contrast to this: the whole of mankind gone astray.

The complete human being is no longer a product of nature, he is an artificial product like corn, and fruit-trees, and the Creole race and thoroughbred horses and dogs, the vine, etc.—

The fault lies in that all mankind has failed. If a man claims to live and develop in a human way, it is megalomania. All mankind, and especially the Christian part of it, suffers from megalomania.

Among us, monuments are erected to the dead, since we have a duty towards them; we allow lepers to marry; but their offspring—? The unborn—?

FROM THE FIRST ACT

Pastor M. But one has a duty towards the society in which one lives. If one has a good and beneficial vocation to work at—and such we ought all to have, Mrs. Alving—then one owes it to that vocation and to one's self to stand before the eyes of society in as irreproachable a light as possible; for if one be not irreproachable, one can make no progress with one's aims.

Mrs. A. Yes, you are perfectly right there.

Pastor M. To say nothing of the difficulty—I may even say the painfulness—of the position. The serious Christians of the town take a lively interest in this Orphanage. It is, of course, founded partly for the benefit of the town, as well; and it is to be hoped it will, to a considerable extent, result in lightening our Poor Rates. But now, of course, every one in the town knows that I have been your adviser, and have had the business arrangements in my hands. My parishioners might therefore so easily be led to think that I, their clergyman—

Mrs. A. Yes, it would undoubtedly be unpleasant for you.

Pastor M. To say nothing of the fact that I have no idea of the attitude my superiors in the church would adopt towards the question.

Mrs. A. Very well, my dear Pastor Manders; that consideration is quite decisive.

Pastor M. Then we do not insure?

Pastor M. That is a very disputable point, Mrs. Alving. A child's proper place is, and must be, the home.

Os. There I think you're quite right, Pastor Manders.

Pastor M. Ah, you can hardly have any idea of what a home should be—

O. Oh, but anyhow I have seen other people's homes.

Pastor M. I thought, however, that over there, especially in artistic circles, the life was a somewhat homeless one—

O. Well, most of the young men are forced to live so; they have no money, and besides they don't want to give up their precious freedom—they live frugally, I can tell you, a slice of ham and a bottle of wine.

Pastor M. But in what company?

O. In very pleasant company, Pastor Manders. Sometimes a few models join them and then, as likely as not, there's dancing.
Pastor M. Models—? What do you mean by that?
O. We painters and sculptors require models, I suppose. Otherwise how could we reproduce the tension of the muscles and the reflected lights on the skin—and all that sort of thing.
Pastor M. But you don’t mean to say that there are women who—
O. Who sit to us artists; yes, I can assure you there are.
Pastor M. And such immorality is tolerated by the authorities?
O. The authorities tolerate worse kinds of immorality than that, Pastor, as you are doubtless not unaware—
Pastor M. Alas, alas, that is only too true; but as to these models, it is even worse, for it takes place openly and is spoken about—
O. Yes, it would never occur to us to do otherwise. Oh, I can assure you, there are many fine figures among the models one doesn’t often see here.
Pastor M. Is it in such society you have been living abroad?
O. Sometimes too I visit my friends at their homes; one has to see what their domestic circle is like, play a little with the children.
Pastor M. But you said most of the artists were not married.
O. Oh, that was a mistake—I meant wedded.
Pastor M. But, good heavens—
O. But, my dear Pastor Manders, what are they to do? A poor painter, a poor girl; they can’t afford to marry, it costs a great deal. What are they to do?
Pastor M. I will tell you, Mr. Alving; they should remain apart.
O. That doctrine will scarcely go down with warm-blooded young people, full of the joy of life. Oh, the glorious free life out there.

PASTOR M. And, to make matters worse, such freedom is to be signalised as praiseworthy——

O. Let me tell you, sir, you may visit many of these irregular homes and you will never hear an offensive word there. And let me tell you another thing: I have never come across immorality among our artists over there—but do you know where I have found it——?

PASTOR M. No, I'm happy to say——

O. Well, then, I'm afraid I must inform you. I have met with it in many a pattern husband and father who has come to Paris to have a look round on his own account, one of these gentlemen with a heavy gold chain outside his waistcoat; do you know what is the first thing these gentlemen do? Why, they hunt up some poor artist or other, get on familiar terms with him, ask him to supper at a smart restaurant, make the champagne flow freely—and then take his arm and propose that they shall make a night of it—and then we artists hear of places we never knew of before, and see things we never dreamed of—but these are the respectable men, Pastor Manders, and on their return you can hear their praises of the pure morals of home in contrast to the corruption abroad—oh yes—these men know what's what—they have a right to be heard.

Mrs. A. But, my dear Oswald, you mustn't get excited.

O. No, you're right; it's bad for me—I shall go for a little turn before dinner. Excuse me, Pastor, I know you can't take my point of view; but I had to speak out for once.

(He goes out by the second door to the right.)

PASTOR M. Then this is what he has come to!
REG. You might have brought me up to be a lady, ma'am, it would have suited me better. And then I shouldn't have had to be so careful about money.
THE WILD DUCK
A PLAY IN FIVE ACTS

By Henrik Ibsen

1884
FIRST ACT

At Walle’s house. A richly and comfortably furnished smoking-room; upholstered sofas and armchairs; smoking-tables with pipes and cigar-boxes; lighted lamps and branching candlesticks. At the back, a large open door with curtains drawn back. Within is seen the billiard-room, also lighted up. In front, on the right (in the smoking-room), a small baize door leads into the office. On the left, in front, the fireplace with a fire, and beyond the fireplace a double door leading into the dining-room. From within is heard loud-voiced conversation and laughter of many guests. A glass is tapped with a knife; silence follows. A toast is proposed; then again a loud buzz of conversation.

Walle’s servant, in livery, and two or three hired waiters in black are putting the smoking-room and billiard-room in order.

Walle’s Servant (bends down to put more coal on the fire, while listening and saying to one of the hired waiters). Hark to them, Jensen! now the old man’s on his legs holding a long palaver about Mrs. Sörby.

Hired Waiter (lighting a candlestick). Are they—very good friends, eh?

Walle’s Servant. Lord knows.

Hired Waiter. I’ve heard tell as he’s been a lively customer in his day.
Walle's Servant. May be.

(puts down the fire-shovel.)

Another Hired Waiter (in the doorway of the billiard-room). Pettersen, here's an old chap wanting——

Walle's Servant. Now? They're just going to leave the table.

(Old Ekdahl appears from the right, in the billiard-room. He is white-haired, quiet in manner and stoops somewhat; he is dressed in an old-fashioned overcoat with a high collar; and carries in his hand a winter cap and a faded cotton umbrella. Under his arm a bundle of papers in a blue wrapper.)

Walle's Servant. Good Lord—what do you want here at this time of night?

Ekdahl. I must get into the office——

Walle's Servant. The office was closed an hour ago, and——

Ekdahl. Yes, they told me so; but I'm sure Mr. Gräberg's in there still, and if you—if you* (Points towards the baize door) would let me go this way——

Walle's Servant. Well, you may go. (Moving a table.) Oh, look here, Ekdahl, lend me a hand with this table.

Ekdahl (involuntarily drawing himself up). I—! (Meekly.) Oh, I see, the table——

Walle's Servant. Thanks. (Opens the baize door.) There, in with you, Ekdahl; but mind you go out again the other way, for we've got company.

Ekdahl. Yes, I know—— (He goes into the office.)
One of the Hired Waiters. Is he one of the office people?

Walle's Servant. No, he's only an outside hand that does odd jobs of copying. But he's been a tip-topper in his day, he has.

Hired Waiter. Yes, he looked like it.

Walle's Servant. Ah, he's been a lawyer and deuce knows what. Lord, I know old Ekdahl well, I do. Many a nip of bitters and bottle of ale we two have drunk at Madam Eriksen's.

Hired Waiter. He don't look as if he'd much to stand treat with.

Walle's Servant. Why, bless you, Jensen, it's me that stands treat. I always think there's no harm in being a bit civil to folks that have had a hard time.

Hired Waiter. Did he go bankrupt then?

Walle's Servant. Worse than that. He went to prison.

Hired Waiter. To prison!

Walle's Servant. Or perhaps it was the Penitentiary. (Listens.) Sh! They're leaving the table.

(The dining-room door is thrown open from within, by a couple of waiters. The whole company gradually comes out. Walle leads the way, with an elderly lady [Mrs. Sörby] on his arm; he takes her out through the billiard-room and thence into an adjoining room on the right. Gentlemen of various ages enter in groups and scatter themselves in the smoking-room and billiard-room. Chamberlains Flor, Kaspersen and Sæther enter, conversing with Gregers Walle. Last comes Halfdan Ekdahl.)

Flor. Whew! What a dinner!—It was no joke to do it justice!
Kaspersen. Oh, with a little good-will one can get through a lot in three hours. What do you say, Sæther?

Sæther. It's the appetite that provides the motive power, he-he!

Flor. Ah, if one had your stomach, Kaspersen.

Kaspersen (stroking Flor's waistcoat). I should think your own would hold a good deal.

Flor. Ah, yes, if it could only digest what it can hold——

Gregers Walle. There's a remedy for everything, Mr. Flor. Otherwise why do you suppose an all-seeing Providence created mineral waters?

Kaspersen. Fie, fie, now you're getting Parisian again.

Gregers. It sticks to one, unfortunately. But, you see, I've just come from there.

Walle (re-entering [with Mrs. Sörby]). What are you studying so intently, Ekdahl?

Halfdan. Only an album, Mr. Walle.

Walle. Ah, photographs! They are quite in your line, of course.

Kaspersen. Have you brought any with you? Of your own manufacture? What?

Halfdan. No, I haven't.

Walle. But you ought to have. Then you might have contributed to the entertainment, you know.

Mrs. Sörby. In this house every one is expected to do something in return for his dinner, Mr. Ekdahl.

Flor. Where one dines so well, that duty becomes a pleasure.

Mrs. Sörby. Chamberlain Flor exerts himself on behalf of the ladies till the perspiration runs off him.

Flor. On behalf of the lady, Mrs. Sörby; the lady of the house——
Mrs. Sörby. Ah, to-day you have an easy task. And Chamberlain Kaspersen—what does he do, I wonder—?

Flor. He produces witticisms——

Mrs. Sörby. Did you say, re-produces——?

Kaspersen (laughing). Now you're getting too bad!

Flor. I only said produces, but——

Kaspersen. Oh, well, one can only use the gifts one has.

Mrs. Sörby. That's true; and therefore Chamberlain Sæther is always so ready to turn over music.

Sæther. He-he!

Gregers (softly). You must join in, Hialmar.

HIALMAR EKDAHL (shrugging his shoulders). What am I to talk about?

Valberg. Throw away your cigarette end, and take a proper cigar.

Kaspersen. Yes, but is Mrs. Sörby smoke-dried?

Mrs. Sörby (lighting a cigarette). I take care of that myself.

Sæther. Oh, I say!

Flor. Remarkably delicate Tokay.

Valberg. Yes, you may well say that. But it cost a pretty penny, too; for it's one of the very finest seasons, you must know.

Hialmar. Is there any difference between the seasons?

Valberg. Come! That's good! It really doesn't pay to set good wine before you.

Kaspersen. Tokay is like photographs, Mr. Ekdahl; they both need sunshine. Am I not right?

Hialmar. Yes, light is important, no doubt.

Mrs. Sörby. And it's exactly the same with Chamberlains; they, too, depend very much on sunshine.
Kaspersen. Oh, fie! That's a very threadbare sarcasm!

Flor. Mrs. Sörby is reproducing——

Mrs. Sörby. Possibly; but it's true that the seasons differ greatly.

Kaspersen. But you reckon me among the fine vintages, don’t you, Mrs. Sörby?

Mrs. Sörby. Oh, I'm sure you all belong to the same vintage, all three.

Valberg. Ha, ha, ha!—that's one for you! Fill your glasses, gentlemen. In such villainously cold weather. A good glass, a warm, comfortable home—at least I think it is so. Within one's own four walls is the place to look for true comfort.

(The guests touch their glasses and drink.)

Gråberg (at the baize door). Excuse me, sir, but I can't get out.

Walle. Have you been locked in again?

Gråberg. Yes, and Flaksrud has carried off the keys——

Walle. Well, you can pass out this way.

Gråberg. But here's some one else——

Walle. All right; come through, both of you. Don't be afraid.

(Gråberg and Old Ekdahl come through the baize door.)

Werle (involuntarily). Ugh!

(The laughter and talk among the 'guests cease suddenly. Hjalmar starts at the sight of his father, and turns aside. Gråberg and Ekdahl go out through the billiard-room [and out to the right].)

Werle (mutters). That damned fool Gråberg!

Gregers. Why surely that wasn’t——
Såther. What's the matter? Who was it?

Gregers. Oh, nobody.

Såther (to Hialmar). Did you know that man?

Hialmar. I don't know—I didn't notice—

Såther. And getting in like that through closed doors. I must find out about this.

(Goes away to the others.)

Mrs. Sörby (whispers to the Servant). Give him something to take with him;—something good, mind.

Pettersen. I'll see to it. (Goes out.)

Gregers (softly). So that was really he!

Hialmar. Yes, it was.

Gregers. And you denied him!

Hialmar. But how could I—

Gregers. I'm afraid you've become a coward, Hialmar.

Hialmar. Oh, if you were in my place——

(The conversation amongst the Guests, which has been carried on in low tones, now swells into forced joviality.)

Kaspersen (approaching Hialmar and Gregers in a friendly manner). Aha! here you are reviving old memories. Won't you have a light to your cigar, Mr. Ekdahl? (Handing him a candle.) Allow me.

Hialmar. No, thank you, I won't smoke now.

Flor. Haven't you some verses to read to us, Mr. Ekdahl? You used to write such charming verses.

Hialmar. No, I haven't any.

Flor. Are you all well at home? Your children—. You have children, I think—?

Hialmar. I have a daughter.

Flor. And what does she do?

Hialmar. Hedvig draws.
Flor. No, really? That’s the artistic nature she has inherited.

Sæther (joining them). No, it wasn’t through closed doors. He came on business.

Kaspersen (good-humouredly turning him round). Oh, you’re talking nonsense, Chamberlain. (Draws him away.)

Flor. Heaven knows what he’s jabbering about. (Goes away.)

Hjalmar (whispers). I’m going now, Gregers. Say good-bye to your father for me.

Gregers. Yes, yes. Are you going straight home?

Hjalmar. Yes. Why?

Gregers. Oh, because I may look you up later.

Hjalmar. No, you mustn’t do that. Not at home. We can always arrange to meet somewhere in the town.

Mrs. Sørby. Are you going, Ekdahl?

Hjalmar. Yes.

Mrs. Sørby. Remember me to Gina.

Hjalmar. Thanks.

(He tries to get out, as far as possible unnoticed, to the right.)

Mrs. Sørby (softly, to Pettersen). Well, did you give the old man something?

Pettersen. Yes; I sent him off with a bottle of cognac.

Mrs. Sørby. Oh, you might have thought of something better than that.

Pettersen. Oh, no, Mrs. Sørby; cognac is what he likes best in the world.

Flor (in the doorway of the billiard-room, with a sheet of music in his hand.) Shall we play something to you, Mrs. Sørby?

Mrs. Sørby. Yes, suppose you do.
THE GUESTS. Bravo! Bravo!

(They all go out to the right through the billiard-room. During what follows, the pianoforte is faintly heard.)

GERGERS. Father, won't you stay a moment?
WERLE. What is it?

GERGERS. I must have a word with you.
WERLE. Can it not wait till the others are gone?

GERGERS. No, it cannot; for perhaps I shall go before the others.
WERLE. Go? Will you go? What do you mean by that?

GERGERS. How has that family been allowed to go so miserably to the wall?
WERLE. Do you mean the Ekdahls?

GERGERS. Yes, I mean the Ekdahls. Old Ekdahl was once so closely associated with you. And once in his life, at any rate, he was very useful to you.

WERLE. Oho! you're thinking of the old story in the criminal court? Those affairs were settled long ago. You may be sure he was very well paid.

GERGERS. That may be. But afterwards, father; all the other things——

WERLE. I don't know what you mean by "other things." There are no other things! He never once applied to me while there was yet time. He did not know himself what a mess he was in, until everything came to light, and then of course it was too late.

GERGERS. It's not that I'm talking about, either. But afterwards, since that——

WERLE. Ah, since that. When he came out of prison he was a broken-down being.—I can assure you, Gregers, I have done everything in my power to help him. I have given him copying to do for the office, and I have paid him far, far more than his work is worth. Do you laugh at that? Do you think I am not telling you the truth? Well, I certainly can't refer you to my books, for I never enter payments of that sort——

Gregers (smiles). No, there are certain payments it is not worth while to keep an account of.

Werle (taken aback). What do you mean by that?

Gregers. Have you entered what it cost you to have Hialmar Ekdahl taught photography?

Werle. I! How "entered" it?

Gregers Werle. I have learnt that it was you who paid for his training. And I have learnt, too, that it was you who enabled him to set up house so comfortably.

Werle. Well, and yet you talk as though I had not done enough for Ekdahl's family. I can assure you these people have cost me enough.

Gregers. Have you entered any of these expenses in your books?

Werle. Why do you ask?

Gregers. Oh, I have my reasons. Now tell me; when you interested yourself so warmly in your old friend's son—it was just before his marriage, was it not?

Werle. Why, deuce take it—after all these years, how can I—it must be eighteen or nineteen years ago——

Gregers. It is now about seventeen years ago. You wrote me a letter about that time—a business letter, of course—and in a postscript you mentioned, quite briefly, that Hialmar Ekdahl had married a Miss Hansen.

Werle. Yes, that was quite right. That was her name.

Gregers. But you did not mention that this Miss Hansen was Gina Hansen—our former housekeeper.
Werle (with a forced laugh of derision). No; to tell the truth, it didn’t occur to me that you were so particularly interested in our former housekeeper.

Gregers. No more I was. (Lowers his voice.) But there were others in this house who were particularly interested in her.

Werle. What do you mean by that? (Flaring up.) You are not alluding to me, I hope?

Gregers (softly but firmly). Yes, I am alluding to you.

Werle. And you dare—You presume to—How can that ungrateful hound—that photographer fellow—how dare he accuse me—!

Gregers. Hjalmar has not said a word about these things. I don’t even know that he has any suspicion of such a thing.

Werle. Well then, where have you got it from? Who can have given you such notions about me?

Gregers. My poor unhappy mother once told me this.

Werle. Your mother! I might have known as much! You and she—you always held together against me. It was she who turned you against me, from the first.

Gregers. No, it was all she had to suffer and submit to, until she broke down and came to such a pitiful end.

Werle. Oh, she had nothing to suffer or submit to;—not more than most other people, at all events. But there’s no getting on with overstrained creatures. And you could credit such an accusation—a bare suspicion—!

Gregers. Very well; then I will make it my business to find out the truth—
Werle. You will never go burrowing into old rumours and stories? I really think that at your age you might find something more useful to do.

Gregers. You and I have never agreed as to what is useful.

Werle. Neither about that nor about anything else. Gregers, I believe there is no one in the world you detest as you do me.

Gregers (whispering). I have seen you at much too close quarters.

Werle. You have seen me with your mother’s eyes, that’s what it is.

Gregers. And you have never been able to forgive me for taking after my mother—and for having a kind of feeling for her.

Werle. Listen, Gregers; there are many things that stand between us; but we are father and son, after all. We ought surely to be able to come to some sort of understanding with each other. Outwardly, at any rate.

Gregers. You mean, in the eyes of the world, as it is called?

Werle. Yes, if you like to call it so. Think it over. Wouldn’t one think it ought to be possible? Eh?

Gregers (looking at him coldly). Now I see that you want to make use of me in some way.

Werle. In such a close relationship as ours, the one can always be useful to the other.

Gregers. Yes, so people say.

Werle. When I wrote to you about coming home, I won’t deny that I had something in my mind.

Gregers. H’m!

Werle. You see, our business, the settlement of your mother’s inheritance and all the rest, might if necessary have been arranged between us by correspondence.
But now, as it is—unfortunately—no longer necessary for you to live out there—

GREGERS. Well, what then—?
WERLE. I want very much to have you at home with me for a time. I am a lonely man, GREGERS; I have always felt lonely, all my life through; but most of all now that I am getting up in years. I feel the need of some one about me—

GREGERS. You have Mrs Sörby.
WERLE. Yes, I have her; and she has become, I may say, almost indispensable to me. She is lively and even-tempered; she brightens up the house; and that is a great thing for me—

GREGERS. Well then, you have everything just as you wish it.
WERLE. Yes, but I'm afraid it can't last. A woman so situated may easily find herself in a false position, in the eyes of the world; for that matter it does a man no good, either.

GREGERS. Oh, when a man gives such dinners as you give, he can risk a great deal.
WERLE. Yes, but how about the woman, GREGERS? I fear she won't accept the situation much longer. And even if she did, even if, out of attachment to me, she were to take her chance of gossip and scandal and all that—? Do you think, GREGERS, you with your strong sense of justice—

GREGERS (interrupts him). Tell me in one word;—are you thinking of marrying her?
WERLE. Suppose I were thinking of it? What then?
GREGERS. That's what I say: what then?
WERLE. Should you be inflexibly opposed to it?
GREGERS. Not at all. Not by any means.
Werle. I thought that perhaps your devotion to your mother’s memory—

Gregers (stopping him with a gesture). No, no, no, don’t let us use fine phrases, father. I am not overstrained.

Werle. Well, whatever you may or may not be, at all events you have lifted a weight from my mind. I am extremely pleased that I may reckon on your concurrence in this matter.

Gregers. Now I understand the use you want to put me to.

Werle. Use to put you to? What an expression!

Gregers. Oh, don’t let us be nice in our choice of words—not when we are alone together, at any rate.—(With a laugh.) So this is what made it absolutely essential that I should come to town in person. For the sake of Mrs. Sörby, we are to get up a pretence at family life in the house;—that will be something new indeed!

Werle. How dare you say such things!

Gregers. Was there ever any family life here? But now your plans demand something of the sort. Of course; I can see that. And no doubt it will have an excellent effect when it is reported that the son has hastened home, on the wings of filial piety, to the grey-haired father’s wedding-day. So, after all, the relations between them are perfectly cordial. Yes, of course. Father and son—how indeed could it be otherwise! Why, it’s the order of nature—

Werle. Yes, it ought to be the order of nature, Gregers—

Gregers. Oh, I haven’t a rag of belief either in nature or in its order.

Werle. Listen to me; I will tell you that there may be much to blame in my way of life—(raising his voice) but there are certain things for which I demand respect in my house!

Gregers (bowing slightly). So I have observed; and therefore I take my hat and go.

Werle. You are going—! Out of the house?

Gregers. Yes, for there is only one thing in the world that I have respect for.

Werle. And what is that?

Gregers. You would only laugh if I told you.

Werle. A lonely man doesn't laugh so easily, Gregers.

Gregers (pointing towards the billiard-room). Look father; the Chamberlains are playing blind-man's-buff with Mrs. Sörby.—Good-night and good-bye.

(He goes out to the right.)

Werle (smiling contemptuously after him). Ha—!

And he says he is not overstrained.

---

SECOND ACT

Hjalmar Ekdahl's studio, a good-sized room, but poorly furnished, evidently in the top storey of the building.

On the right, a sloping roof of large panes of glass, half-covered by a blue curtain. In the right-hand corner, at the back, the entrance door; two doors on the opposite side. At the back, in the middle, a large double sliding-door. Towards the front, by the right-hand wall, an old, worn sofa with a table and a couple of chairs. On the table a lighted lamp. Photographic apparatus of different kinds about the room, Photographs lying on the table; bottles and boxes of various chemicals on a bookcase at the back.

(Mrs. Ekdahl sits on a chair by the table, sewing. Hedvig is sitting on the sofa, drawing.)
Mrs. Ekdahl. How much was it you paid for the butter to-day?

Hedvig. It was forty-five öre.

Mrs. Ekdahl. And then there's the beer. Look there—that makes it over a crown.

Hedvig. Yes, but then father took four crowns fifty for the photographs.

Mrs. Ekdahl. So much as that?

Hedvig. Yes, exactly four crowns fifty.

(Silence.)

Mrs. Ekdahl. H'm—I'd just like to know how your father's getting on at the party.

Hedvig. Yes, it would be fun if we could see him.

(Old Ekdahl, with the paper parcel under his arm, comes in by the door on the right.)

Hedvig. How late you are to-day, grandfather!

Ekdahl. Gråberg kept me so long; he's always so long-winded, that man.

Mrs. Ekdahl. Did you get any more copying to do, father?

Ekdahl. Yes, this whole packet.

Mrs. Ekdahl. That's capital.

Ekdahl (putting down his umbrella). This work will keep me going a long time, Gina. (Opens one of the sliding-doors at the back a little). Hush! (Looks into the dark room; pushes the door to again.) Hee-hee-hee! They're all sitting fast asleep. (Goes towards the farther door on the left.) There are matches in here, I suppose?

Mrs. Ekdahl. The matches is on the drawers.

(Ekdahl goes out.)

Hedvig. It's nice that grandfather has got all that copying.
Mrs. Ekdahl. Yes, poor old father; it means a bit of money for him.

Hedvig. And he won't be able to sit the whole forenoon down at that horrid Madam Eriksen's.

Mrs. Ekdahl. No more he won't. All the same—well, I don't know—but I think somehow men are more pleasant like when they've had something to drink.

Hedvig. Ugh, no! Well, they may be more pleasant; but it makes it so unsafe——

Mrs. Ekdahl. How unsafe?

Hedvig. I mean, it's so unsafe for the rest of us; we never know quite how to treat them.

Mrs. Ekdahl (looks at her). When have you noticed that?

Hedvig. Oh, you can always notice that. Moldstad and Riser are both of them tipsy very often——

Mrs. Ekdahl. Then it was them two you were thinking of.

(Old Ekdahl comes in again and is going out by the foremost door to the left.)

Mrs. Ekdahl (half turning in her chair). Do you want something out of the kitchen, father?

Ekdahl. Yes, I do. Don't you trouble.

(Goes out.)

Mrs. Ekdahl. He's not poking away at the fire, is he? Hedvig, go and see what he's about.

(Ekdahl comes in again with a small jug of steaming hot water.)

Hedvig. Have you been getting some hot water, grandfather?

Ekdahl. Yes, I have. I want it. I want to write, and the ink has got as thick as porridge.

Mrs. Ekdahl. But you mustn't sit up so late and burt your eyes, father.
Ekdahl. My eyes must take care of themselves, Gina. I'm busy, I tell you. No one's to come in to me.

(He goes into his room.)

Mrs. Ekdahl (softly). Can you imagine where he's got money from?

Hedvig. From Gråberg, perhaps.

Mrs. Ekdahl. Not a bit of it. Gråberg always pays me.

Hedvig. Then perhaps he's got a bottle on credit.

Mrs. Ekdahl. Poor father, who'd give him credit?

(Hjalmar Ekdahl comes in from the right.)

Mrs. Ekdahl (rising). Why, is that you already?

Hjalmar (taking off his hat). Yes, most of the people were coming away.

Hedvig (who has risen). So early, father?

Hjalmar (taking off his overcoat). Yes, it was a dinner-party, you know.

Mrs. Ekdahl. Let me help you. (Hangs up his coat.) Were there many people there?

Hjalmar. Oh no, not many. We were about twelve or fourteen. (To Hedvig.) Hasn't grandfather come home?

Hedvig. Yes, he's in his room.

Hjalmar. Well, did he say anything?

Mrs. Ekdahl. No, nothing particular.

Hjalmar. Didn't he say anything about——? I heard something about his having been with Gråberg. —I'll go in and see him for a moment.

Mrs. Ekdahl. No, no, better not.

Hjalmar. Why not? Did he say he didn't want me to go in——?

Mrs. Ekdahl. I don't think he wants to see nobody; he has been in to fetch hot water.

Hjalmar. Oho! Then he's—— (making a sign).
Mrs. Ekdahl. Yes, I expect so.

Hjalmar. Oh, God! my poor old father! Well, well; there let him sit and get all the enjoyment he can.

(Old Ekdahl, in an indoor coat and with a lighted pipe, comes from his room.)

Ekdahl. Ah, there he is. I thought I heard you.

Hjalmar. Yes, I have just come.

Ekdahl. You didn’t see me there, did you?

Hjalmar. No, I didn’t. I heard you had passed through——

Ekdahl. Who were they, all those fellows?

Hjalmar. Oh, all sorts of people. There was Chamberlain Flor and Chamberlain Kaspersen and Chamberlain——

Ekdahl. Hear that, Gina! Chamberlains, every one of them!

Mrs. Ekdahl. Ah, it must have been terrible genteel.

Hedvig. Did they want you to read something aloud, father?

Hjalmar. Yes, they wanted me to; but I knew better than that.

Ekdahl. You weren’t to be persuaded, eh?

Mrs. Ekdahl. But you might have done it.

Hjalmar. No; one mustn’t be at everybody’s beck and call. That’s not my way, at any rate. And I wasn’t at all in the mood for it, either.

Ekdahl. No, no; Hjalmar’s not to be had for the asking, he isn’t.

Hjalmar. I don’t see why I should bother myself to entertain people on the rare occasions when I go into society. And I let them know it, too. Yes, I even found myself called upon to administer a pretty sharp correction to one or two of those gentlemen.
Mrs. Ekdahl. No, did you do that?
Ekdahl. Was it any of the Chamberlains?
Hialmar. Indeed it was. We had a little discussion about Tokay——
Ekdahl. Ah, yes, there's a fine wine.
Hialmar. Yes, but of course you know the vintages differ; it all depends on how much of the sun's heat the grapes have had.
Mrs. Ekdahl. Why, you know everything, Ekdahl.
Ekdahl. And did they dispute that with you?
Hialmar. Yes, they tried to; but then I let them know [they were requested to observe] that it was just the same with Chamberlains; that with them, too, different batches were of different qualities,—I said.
Mrs. Ekdahl. What things you do think of!
Ekdahl. And you said that to them——
Hialmar. Right in their teeth.
Ekdahl. Do you hear that, Gina? He said it right in their very teeth.
Mrs. Ekdahl. Fancy—! Right in their teeth!
Hialmar (taking up a position on the pedestal). Yes, I stood like this; look here—leaning against the mantlepiece and playing with my right glove while I told them that.
Ekdahl. Right in their teeth.
Hedvig. How nice it is to see father in a dress-coat! It suits you so well, father.
Hialmar. Yes, doesn't it? And this one fits as if it had been made for me. A little tight in the arm-holes, perhaps.—(Takes off the coat.) But now I'll put on my frock-coat—(does so) there's a more homely feeling about it. (To Gina.) Don't forget to send the coat back to Molvik first thing to-morrow morning.
THE WILD DUCK

MRS. EKDAHL. I'll be sure and see to it.

HIALMAR (seating himself on the sofa). Ah, one is never so comfortable as in the corner of one's own sofa—with one's feet under one's own table.—

MRS. EKDAHL. And with a glass of beer and a pipe—

HIALMAR. Have we any beer in the house?

MRS. EKDAHL. Yes, we haven't forgotten that.

(Goes into the kitchen.)

HEDVIG. Here's your pipe and tobacco—

HIALMAR. Thanks! I've been regularly longing for my pipe. Werle's cigars may be good enough; but a good pipe is something different in the long run.

MRS. EKDAHL (comes in from the kitchen with bottles of beer and glasses). There, now you can quench your thirst.

HIALMAR. That's capital. Come now, father, we'll have a glass together.

EKDAHL. Hum; I think I'll fill my pipe first.

(Goes into his room.)

MRS. EKDAHL. (smiling). Fill his pipe!

HIALMAR. Oh, well, well, well; leave him alone, poor old father.

(There is a knock at the door on the right.)

MRS. EKDAHL. Hush, wasn't that a knock at the door? Who can it be? (Goes and opens the door.)

GREGERS (in the passage). Excuse me; does not Mr. Ekdahl, the photographer, live here?

MRS. EKDAHL. Yes, he does.

HIALMAR (rising). Gregers! You here after all? Well, come in then.

GREGERS (coming in). I told you I would come and see you.
Hialmar. But this evening——? Have you left the party?

Gregers. I have left both the party and the house. Good evening, Mrs. Ekdahl; can you remember me after all these years? Do you recognise me?

Mrs. Ekdahl. Oh, yes, I do indeed.

Hialmar. Left your father's house, did you say——?

Gregers. Yes, I'm staying at a hotel to-night, and to-morrow I shall take a lodging. By-the-bye, Hialmar, you have a couple of rooms to let.

Hialmar. Yes, so we have, but——

Mrs. Ekdahl. But I'm sure they're not the sort of rooms for you, Mr. Werle.

Gregers. You need not be afraid of that; I expect I shall be satisfied; and we can easily agree about the rent.

Hialmar. Well, that is very fortunate for us.—Now, since you're here, you'll sit down, won't you?

Gregers. Thanks; these are regular artists' quarters.

Hialmar. This is the studio, as you see——

Mrs. Ekdahl. But it's the largest of our rooms, so we generally sit here.

II

FROM THE SECOND ACT

Gregers. You were a great sportsman then, Lieutenant Ekdal.

Ekdal. So I was; so I was; went shooting every day. [Uniform——]
GREGERS. And now I suppose you never get any shooting?

EKDAL. No, I never get any shooting now. That is, not in the old way.

HIALMAR. Sit down, father, and have a glass of beer. Sit down, Gregers, and help yourself.

(EKDAL and GREGERS seat themselves on the sofa; the others sit at the table.)

GREGERS. Can you remember, Lieutenant Ekdal, that Christmas I came up and visited you with Hialmar?

EKDAL. At the works? That must be a long time ago.

GREGERS. I suppose it is now more than twenty years ago. It was the winter there were so many wolves up there.

EKDAL. Ah, was it that winter! Then perhaps you used to be with us at night, when we lay in the stables and watched for them?

GREGERS. Yes, I was there. Hialmar came too the first night; but then he got tired of it. But I kept on. Don't you remember, you put out the carcase of a dead horse in front of the stable-door?

EKDAL. Yes, to be sure: it lay close to a big briar bush.

GREGERS. Quite right.

EKDAL. And then there was a heap of stones along-side, that cast a shadow in the moonlight——

GREGERS. Yes, and there was moonlight those nights, as clear as to-night——

EKDAL. But the wolves didn't come in the moonlight. But don't you remember that morning in the early dawn, after the moon had set——?

GREGERS. When thirteen of them came together——?
Ekdal. No, do you remember that! I shot one of them by the carcase and another as they were running away.

Gregers. Yes, you were indeed a great sportsman, Lieutenant Ekdal.

Ekdal. Oh yes, oh yes; not so bad. I've shot bears too; shot all kinds of things, both beasts and birds. For the woods, you see—the woods, the woods—! What are the woods like up there now?

Ekdal. But we have to thank him for her, all the same. He was out shooting, you see; and he brought her down; but she was only wounded—

Gregers. Ah! She got a couple of slugs or so in her body—

Hialmar. Yes, she got a couple from behind.

Gregers. Oh! from behind?

Ekdal. You always have to shoot wild duck from behind.

Gregers. Of course; from behind they are easier to hit.

Ekdal. I should think so; if you shoot against the breast, the shot glances off.

Ekdal. Well, your father had such an amazingly good dog, you see; one of these new-fangled, long-haired water-dogs, and he dived in after the duck and fetched her up again.

Gregers. And then she was sent to you?

Hialmar. She was not sent to us at once; at first your father took her home. But she wouldn't thrive there properly.

Gregers. No, no, that's not a good place for wild-fowl [wild duck].

Hialmar. No, you can imagine it wasn't, among all the tame ones. They were always setting upon her and taking her food from her, so that she had no chance of recovering. So Pettersen was told to put an end to her.

Ekdal (half asleep). H'm—yes—Pettersen—yes—

Hialmar (softly). That was how we got her, you see; for father knows Pettersen a little; and when he heard about the wild duck he got her handed over to us.

Gregers. And now she thrives [as] well [as possible] in the garret there?

Hialmar. Splendidly, yes. She has lived in there so long now that she has forgotten her natural wild life; and it all depends on that.

Gregers. You are right there, Hialmar. If one would keep wild duck—and if they are to thrive and grow big and fat—I think the only way is to shut them up in a garret, so that they never get a glimpse of the clouds or the sea.

Hialmar. Yes, yes, and then they forget, you see. And after all, what they have forgotten, they will never feel the want of.

Gregers. No, and then in time they can grow fat. —But look here, Hialmar, you said you had rooms to let, spare rooms.
THIRD ACT

HiAlMAR Ekdal's studio. It is morning; the daylight shines through the window on the right.

HiAlMAR is sitting at the table, busy with some photographic negatives and prints. Presently Gina, wearing her hat and cloak, enters from the right. She has a covered basket on her arm.

HiAlMAR. Back already? Did you look in at Gregers' room?

Gina. Yes. He has arranged everything as he likes it. He'll do everything for himself, he said.

HiAlMAR. I looked in upon him too.

EkDal. Yes, exactly; exactly.

(HiAlMAR and EkDal open the upper half-door of the garret. The morning sun is shining in through the skylights; doves are flying in all directions; some sit cooing, upon the perches; the cocks and hens are heard crowing and clucking now and then.)

HiAlMAR (opens one of the lower half-doors a little way). Squeeze through now, father.

EkDal (creeps through the opening). Aren't you coming too?

HiAlMAR. Well, I almost think— (Sees Gina at the kitchen door.) No, I haven't time; I must work. And then there was the net— (He pulls a cord, a piece of stretched fishing net slips down in front of the opening.) So! (Goes to the table.)

Gina. Is he in there again?
HIALMAR. Would you rather have had him slip down to Madam Eriksen's? Do you want anything? You know you said—

GINA. I only wanted to ask if you think we can lay the table for lunch here?

HIALMAR. Yes; we have no appointment for to-day, I suppose?

GINA. No.

HIALMAR. Well then I hope there won't be any appointment either; and so we can have lunch here.

GINA. All right; but there's no hurry about it; you can have the table yet awhile.

HIALMAR (sitting down again). Oh, bless me, I'm sticking at it as hard as I can!

(GINA goes out into the kitchen again.)

EKDAL (appears behind the net). I'm afraid we shall have to move the water-trough after all, Hialmar.

HIALMAR. What else have I been saying all along?

EKDAL. H'm—h'm—h'm. (Is no longer seen.)

(HIALMAR goes on working a little; glances towards the opening and half rises. Hedvig comes in from the kitchen.)

HIALMAR (sits down hurriedly). What do you want? Perhaps you are told off to watch me?

HEDVIG. No, no. Isn't there anything I could help you with?

HIALMAR. Oh, no; it is right that I should bear the burden alone—so long as my strength holds out.

(HEDVIG goes over to the doorway and looks for a moment into the garret.)

HIALMAR. Tell me, what is he doing?

HEDVIG. I think he's making a new path to the water-trough.
HIALMAR. He can never manage that alone. Look, Hedvig—you are so clever; take this brush—

HEDVIG. Oh, yes, father!

HIALMAR. Only for a second, you know. It’s this retouching—here is one to copy.

HEDVIG. Yes, I know how to do it; I’ve done it with the others, you know.

HIALMAR. Only a second; and then I shall have finished this job.

(He pushes one of the lower half-doors a little to one side, creeps into the garret and draws the door to after him. HEDVIG sits at work, retouching; HIALMAR and EKDAL are heard disputing inside.)

GREGERS. I suppose so; it must be a sort of world by itself.

HEDVIG. Oh, yes, quite. And there are such lots of wonderful things.

GREGERS. Indeed?

HEDVIG. Yes, there are big cupboards full of books; and a great many of the books have pictures in them.

GREGERS. Aha!

HEDVIG. And there’s an old bureau with drawers and flaps, and a big clock with figures that come out; but it isn’t going now.

GREGERS. So time has come to a standstill in there—in the wild duck’s domain.

HEDVIG. Yes. And then there’s an old paint-box, and all the books.

GREGERS. And you read the books, I suppose?

HEDVIG. Oh, yes; most of them are English though, and I don’t understand English. But then I look at the pictures. There is one great big book called “Harrison’s History of London," [it must be a hundred years old]; and there are such heaps of pictures in it. At the beginning there is Death with an hour-glass, and other figures. I think that is horrid. But then there are other pictures of churches, and castles, and streets, and great ships sailing on the sea.

Gregers. And when you look at all these pictures, I suppose you want to go over to London?

Hedvig. Oh, of course I can't go there; but there is no need to, either.

Gregers. No, no, because you know it, of course. And besides, you couldn't very well tear yourself away from the wild duck.

Hedvig. I should miss her, I know. For there is so much that is strange about her. Nobody knows her, and nobody knows where she came from—

(Gina comes in from the kitchen with the table things.)

Gregers (rising). I have come in upon you too early.

Gina. Oh, no; we're nearly ready now. Clear the table, Hedvig.

(Hedvig clears away her things; she and Gina lay the cloth during what follows. Gregers sits down and turns over an album.)

Gregers. I hear you can retouch, Mrs. Ekdal.

Gina (with a side glance). Yes, I can.

Gregers. That was exceedingly lucky.

Gina. How—lucky?

Gregers. That Hjalmar took to photography, I mean.

Gina. I can take photographs too; I learned that.

Gregers. So it is really you that carry on the business, I suppose?
Gina. Yes, when Ekdal hasn’t time himself—
(A shot is fired within the garret.)
Gregers (starting up). What’s that?
Gina. Ugh! now they’re firing again!
Gregers (going towards the doorway). Have they firearms in there?
Hjalmar (inside the net). Are you there? I didn’t know.
Gregers. Do you go shooting in there?
Hjalmar (showing a revolver). Only with this thing——
Gina. Yes, you’ll do yourself a mischief some day with that there pigstol.
Hjalmar (snappishly). I have told you so often that it’s called a pistol!
Gina. Oh, one’s just as good as the other.
Gregers. So you go shooting, too, up here?
Hjalmar. Only a little target practice. Mostly to please father, you understand. And then the fortunate thing about it is that no one can hear it on the floor below.
Gregers. You have a fowling-piece too, I see.
Hjalmar. That is father’s. It’s of no use; something has gone wrong with the lock. But it’s fun to have it all the same; for we can take it to pieces now and then, and clean and grease it, and screw it together again, you see.
Hedvig (who has approached). Now you can see the wild duck properly.
Gregers. I was just looking at her. One of her wings seems to me to droop a bit.
Hjalmar. Well, no wonder; her wing was broken, you know.
Gregers. And she trails one foot a little; isn’t that so?
HIALMAR. Perhaps a very little bit.
HEDVIG. Yes, it was by that foot the dog took hold of her.

HIALMAR. But she is not a bit the worse for it; and that is simply marvellous for a creature that has had a charge of shot in her body, and has been between a dog's teeth—

GREGERS. —and that has lain in the depths of the sea—so long.

HEDVIG (smiling). Yes.

GINA (at the table). Hedvig, you must come and help me now.

(GINA and HEDVIG go out into the kitchen.)

HIALMAR (crawls through the lower half-door and comes into the studio). I won't ask you to go in to father; he doesn't like it. I may as well shut up before the others come. (Draws up the net and shuts the upper half-doors.) All these contrivances are necessary, you see, for Gina objects to having rabbits and fowls in the studio.

GREGERS. Of course; a good housekeeper like your wife—

HIALMAR. This arrangement of the fishing net is my own invention. And it's really quite amusing to have things of this sort to potter with, and to put to rights again when now and then they get out of order.

GREGERS. You and I have got on well in the world, Hialmar.

HIALMAR. How do you mean?

GREGERS. I have gone farthest; for I have gone so far that soon I shall be fit for absolutely nothing.

HIALMAR. You needn't be fit for anything either. You can live very well without that.

GREGERS. Do you think so?
HiALMAR. Yes, I certainly think that you are well enough off.

Gregers. Well, but what about yourself?

HiALMAR (in a lower voice). Is it my fault that things went as they did—that I was thrown out of my course—?

Gregers. That is not what I mean—

HiALMAR. Then perhaps you mean that I don't work my way to the front;—perhaps you think I don't toil and drudge enough.

Gregers. I don't know at all how much you toil and drudge.

HiALMAR. Yes, of course you think there's too much time wasted over useless things.

Gregers. Not time but will.

HiALMAR. But how can I let my poor old father go so absolutely alone? Isn't it right that I should give a little thought to the trifles that amuse him?

Gregers. Is it altogether for your father's sake—?

HiALMAR. Oh, no, I dare say it's for my own as well. I need something to take me out of reality.

Gregers. Then you are not happy after all?

HiALMAR. Happy—happy? Oh, yes, I am, in a way. I am quite comfortable—as far as that goes. But of course you can imagine that a position like that of a photographer—for a man like me, is nothing but a transitional phase.

Gregers. Ah!

HiALMAR. Of course. And therefore—I tell you plainly, Gregers, I need something to fill up the interval—

Gregers. Could not your work do that?

HiALMAR. No, no, no, not work alone; I must dream the interval away—leap over it.
THE WILD DUCK

Gregers. And when the interval is past—what comes then?
Hjalmar. Ah, then comes the moment, it is to be hoped.
Gregers. What moment?
Hjalmar. I have a mission, you must know.
Gregers. Well, what do you mean by that?
Hjalmar. A mission—a life’s mission. It is I, you see, who must restore our family name to honour. Who else should do it?
Gregers. Then that is your mission.
Hjalmar. Yes, of course.
Gregers. And what course do you propose to follow?
Hjalmar. Oh, my dear fellow, how can I tell you that beforehand? It depends so enormously upon how circumstances shape themselves when the moment arrives.
Gregers. And you have no doubt at all about the moment?
Hjalmar. That would be doubting my own purpose in life.
Gregers. Do you know for certain that you have any purpose?
Hjalmar. Are you mad?
Gregers. Look here, Hjalmar, there is something of the wild duck in you. You were once wounded, and you dived down and bit yourself fast in the undergrowth.
Hjalmar. That was odd.
Gregers. But now I’m going to see if I can’t get you up again. For I too think I have a sort of mission in life, you must know. Not in the way you mean;—not because I feel it as a purpose or as a duty towards others, but because I feel it as a necessity to myself.
HIALMAR. No, my dear Gregers, I don't understand a word of all this.—Ah, now we're going to have lunch.

(GINA and HEDVIG bring bottles of ale, a decanter of brandy, glasses, etc. At the same time, RELLING and MOLVIK enter from the right.)

GINA. Ah, you two have come in the nick of time.

RELLING. Molvik got it into his head that he could smell herring-salad, and then there was no holding him.

—Good morning again, Ekdal.

HIALMAR. Gregers, may I introduce you to Doctor Relling—Mr. Molvik.

RELLING. Oh, Mr. Werle! You've just moved in?

GREGERS. I moved in this morning.

RELLING. Molvik and I live right under you; so you haven't far to go for the doctor and the clergyman, if you should need anything in that line.

GREGERS. Thanks, it's not quite unlikely; for yesterday we were thirteen at table.

HIALMAR. Were we thirteen?

RELLING. You may make your mind easy, Ekdal; I'll be hanged if the finger of fate points to you.

HIALMAR. I hope not. But come and sit down.

GREGERS. Shall we not wait for your father?

HIALMAR. No, his lunch will be taken in to him.

Come along!

(The men seat themselves at table. GINA and HEDVIG go backwards and forwards and wait upon them.)

RELLING. Molvik was frightfully screwed yesterday, Mrs. Ekdal.

GINA. Really? Is that true, Molvik?

MOLVIK. Oh, that depends on how you take it.

RELLING. Didn't you hear us when we came home?

GINA. No, I can't say I did.
RELLING. Well, Molvik was disgusting yesterday. But it agrees with Molvik, Mr. Werle. I'm his doctor and I prescribe a spree for him now and then.

GREGERS. Is Mr. Molvik an obedient patient—?
RELLING. I can't complain. But he understands that it has got to be, you see; for Molvik is dæmonic.
GREGERS. Dæmonic?
RELLING. Molvik is a dæmonic nature, yes.
GREGERS. H'm.
MOLVIK. Yes, that's what they say about me.
RELLING. And persons of dæmonic character can't walk straight through the world, you see. That kind of people must meander a little now and then. You must have lived a very long time up at the works, Mr. Werle.
GREGERS. I have lived there a good many years.
RELLING. How the devil have you managed to endure it?
GREGERS. Oh, if one has books—
RELLING. Books! They will only make you read yourself mad.
GREGERS. Well, there are people up there too.
RELLING. Yes, the work-people. Look here, my good sir, I dare swear you have a mission in life.
GREGERS. I believe so too.
HIALMAR. And it is a belief that gives one strength, Relling.
RELLING. Yes, I know you can say a word or two about that.
HIALMAR. Oh, yes.

(A knock at the garret door.)

GINA. Hedvig, opens the door for grandfather.

(HEDVIG opens the door a little way; OLD EKDAL crawls out.)
EKDAL (mumbling). Good morning, gentlemen! Good appetite to you! H’m—!(Goes into his room.)

RELLING. Let us drink a glass to him, Ekdal, and may he soon be in regimentals again.

HIALMAR. Thanks.

GREGERS. Regimentals?

RELLING. His lieutenant's uniform, of course.

GREGERS (looking at HIALMAR). Is that all you think about?

HIALMAR. Well, of course the rehabilitation of his honour goes with it. But the uniform is the most important thing to father. An old soldier——

GREGERS. Yes, but you! 'Yourself, Hialmar: you are not going to be satisfied with that sort of thing.

RELLING. Then what the devil more should he want?

GREGERS. So it is only the brand of punishment you would wash off him!

RELLING. Upon my soul, I think that wouldn't be a bad thing at all.

GREGERS. And I imagined it was the guilt itself you wished to release him from!

RELLING. Now we are going to hear something!

HIALMAR. What is past cannot be altered.

GREGERS. Do you believe he was as guilty as he appeared to be?

HIALMAR. I don't believe he had any idea of what he was doing.

GREGERS (rising). And even so you have lived here all these years, gone sluggishly through life and waited and waited—or perhaps not even that——

RELLING. You've been brooding too long up in those woods, Mr. Werle.

GREGERS. If I had had the good fortune to have such a father as you have——
HIALMAR. The good fortune—!

GREGERS. —then I would have been a different sort of son to him— But it is your surroundings that have pulled you down into the mire.

RELLING. Look here, I say!

MOLVIK. Are you referring to me?

HIALMAR. What have you to say about my surroundings?

GINA. Hush, hush, Ekdal. Don't say any more about it.

GREGERS. I have this to say, that a man who lives his life, his most intimate home life, in a marsh of lies and deceit and concealment—

HIALMAR. Have you gone mad!

RELLING (jumps up). Be quiet, Mr. Werle!

HIALMAR. His most intimate home life—!

(A knock at the door on the right.)

GINA. Hush, be quiet; somebody's coming.

(Goes over to the door.)

HIALMAR. Have you gone stark mad, Gregers!

GINA (opens the door and draws back). Oh—what's this!

(WERLE, in a fur coat, advances one step into the room.)

WERLE. Excuse me; but I think my son is staying here.

GINA (with a gulp). Yes.

HIALMAR (who has risen). Won't you—?

WERLE. Thank you, I wish to speak to my son.

GREGERS. What is it? Here I am.

WERLE. I want a few words with you, in your room.

GREGERS. And I, for my part, desire witnesses.
Werle. What I wish to speak to you about is not of such a nature that—

Gregers. I am not disposed, for the present, to speak about anything but the Ekdals' affairs.

Werle. The Ekdals' affairs?

Gregers. And these two gentlemen belong to the house in a way.

Werle. What I have to say to you concerns only you and me.

Gregers. Since I lost my mother I think there is only one thing in the world that concerns me, that is the Ekdals' affairs.

Hialmar. I don't know what there is especially to talk about in our affairs.

Werle. Nor I either.

Gregers. But I know it, and I intend to shout it out at every street corner. Every man in the country shall hear that the culprit was not Lieutenant Ekdal, but one who goes about free and unfettered to this very day.

Werle. And you dare to say that, you madman!—For I suppose it's to me that you allude.

Gregers. No, I allude more particularly to myself.

Werle. What are you thinking of? You knew nothing—

Gregers. I had my doubts at the time it all happened; if I had spoken to Ekdal then, while there was yet time—

Werle. Well, why didn't you speak?

Gregers. I was afraid of you.

Werle. Evasions, inventions, imagination. You yourself gave evidence in court—

Gregers. Yes, I was cowardly enough for that. I was afraid to take my share of the guilt.
Werle. Oh, this is that desperately sick conscience of yours.
Gregers. It is you who have made my conscience sick.
Werle. You’re mistaken; it is a legacy from your mother, Gregers. The only one she left you.
Gregers. Are you still unable to forget that you [were mistaken when you] thought she would bring you a fortune?
Werle. We won’t speak of these matters. I came to ask whether you will return home with me.
Gregers. No.
Werle. And you won’t enter the firm either?
Gregers. No.
Werle. Very good. But as I am thinking of marrying again, your share of the property will fall to you at once.
Gregers. I do not want that.
Werle. You don’t want it?
Gregers. No.
Werle. Are you going up to the works again?
Gregers. No; I consider myself released from your service.
Werle. Then what are you going to live upon?
Gregers. I have laid by a little out of my salary.
Werle. How long will that last?
Gregers. I think it will last my time.
Werle. What do you mean?
Gregers. I shall answer no more questions.
Werle. Good-bye then, Gregers.
Gregers. Good-bye.

(Werle goes out to the right.)

Hjalmar (looking in through the sitting-room door).
He’s gone, isn’t he?
Gregers. Yes.

(Gina and Hedvig enter from the kitchen; Relling and Molvik from the sitting-room.)

Relling. That luncheon-party was a failure.

Gregers. Put on your coat, Hialmar; I want you to come for a long walk with me.

Hialmar. With pleasure.

Gregers. I'm only going to fetch my overcoat.

(Goes out to the right.)

Gina. Don't go with him, Ekdal.

Relling. Stay where you are; don't go out now.

Hialmar (putting on his overcoat). Not for the world. I must find out what all this means——

Relling. But devil take it, don't you see that the fellow's mad, cracked, demented!

Gina. There, what did I tell you, Ekdal. [His mother before him had strange fits like that sometimes.]

Relling. You mustn't pay any attention to his nonsense.

Gina. No, no, don't.

Hialmar. Then I'll keep an eye on him at any rate.

Good-bye. (Goes out to the right.)

Relling. It's a thousand pities the fellow didn't fall on his head down one of those mines!

Gina. Do you think Gregers Werle is mad?

Relling. No, worse luck; he's no madder than most people.

Molvik. Not daemonic either?

Relling. No, it's only you that are that, Molvik. But one disease he has certainly got in his system.

Gina. What's the matter with him then?

Relling. Well, I'll tell you. He is suffering from an acute attack of integrity.

Gina. Integrity?
Hedvig. What kind of disease is that?
Relling. It's a national disease; but it only appears sporadically.—Come on, Molvik.

(He nods and goes out to the right with Molvik. Gina moves restlessly across the room; Hedvig looks searchingly at her.)

FOURTH ACT

Hialmar Ekdal's studio. Afternoon. It is beginning to grow dusk.
(Hedvig is moving about the studio. Gina enters from the kitchen.)

Gina. Not yet?
Hedvig. No.
Gina. Are you sure he's not in Werle's room?
Hedvig. No, it's locked.
Gina. Nor down in Relling's either?
Hedvig. No, I've been down twice and asked.
Gina. And his dinner's standing and getting cold out there.
Hedvig. Yes, can you imagine what has become of him, mother? He's always home so punctually to dinner.
Gina. Oh, he'll be here directly, you'll see.
Hedvig (after a short silence). Do you think it's a good thing that Werle has come to live with us?
Gina. Why shouldn't it be a good thing?
Hedvig. Well, I don't know; but we were so comfortable by ourselves. And I think Relling suits father much better than Werle.—Oh, what can have become of him!
Gina (calls out). There he is!
(Hialmar Ekdal comes in from the right.)
HEDVIG (going to him). Father! So you've come at last!

GINA. We've been waiting such a long time for you, Ekdal!

HIALMAR. I was out rather long, yes.

GINA. Perhaps you've had dinner with Werle?

HIALMAR. No.

GINA. Then I'll bring some in for you.

HIALMAR. No, let it alone; I want nothing to eat.

HEDVIG. Are you not well, father?

HIALMAR. Oh yes, well enough. We have had a very long walk——

GINA. You didn't ought to have gone so far, Ekdal; you're not used to it.

HIALMAR. One can get used to a good many things. Have any orders come in to-day?

GINA. No, not to-day.

HEDVIG. There will be some to-morrow, father, you'll see.

HIALMAR. I should be glad of it; for to-morrow I am going to set to work properly; I mean to do everything myself; I shall take it into my own hands.

GINA. But why do you want to do that, Ekdal? What is the use of making your life a burden to you?

HIALMAR. That is my business. And then I should like to keep proper accounts too.

GINA. You?

HIALMAR. Yes, don't you keep accounts?

HEDVIG. But mother keeps the accounts so well.

HIALMAR. And she seems to make the money go a very long way, too. It's remarkable that we can live so well on the little money I have made this winter.

HEDVIG. Yes, but remember all the copying for Gråberg, father.
HIALMAR. Copying, yes!
GINA. Nonsense, that doesn’t come to much—
HEDVIG. Yes, indeed it does; it’s mostly that we live on.
GINA. How can you say such a thing?
HEDVIG. Dear me, why mayn’t father know that?
HIALMAR. So that is what we are living on. Copying for Mr. Werle.
GINA. You know very well that it’s Gråberg who pays for it.
HIALMAR. Out of his own pocket?
GINA. Yes, I suppose so.
HEDVIG. But it’s all the same to us, father.
HIALMAR. Of course; it’s all the same to us where the money comes from.
GINA. That’s what I think too. But as we’re talking about it—! You haven’t been doing anything all day,
HEDVIG—
HEDVIG. Then I had better go in and—
GINA. Yes, do. (HEDVIG goes into the sitting-room.)
GINA. What has happened to you, Ekdal?
HIALMAR. Do you think Gregers is in his senses?
GINA. How should I know? I don’t know much about him.
HIALMAR. If I only knew that.
GINA. Well, you heard what Relling said about him.
HIALMAR. Oh, Relling, Relling—. Light the lamp for me, please.
GINA (lighting the lamp). Gregers Werle has been—odd—all his life.
HIALMAR. It seems to me your voice is trembling.
GINA. Is it?
HIALMAR. And your hands are shaking, are they not?
GINA. Yes. I don’t know what makes them.
HiALMAR. Now I'll tell you what Gregers said about you.

GINA (uneasy, holding her hands to her ears). No, no; I won't hear it!

HiALMAR (pulling her hands away). You shall hear it!

GINA. There's no need for you to say it.

HiALMAR. Then you know what it is?

GINA. I can guess.

HiALMAR. So it is true. True, true! Oh, this is awful!

GINA. I see very well that I ought to have told you long ago.

HiALMAR. You should have told me at the very first;—while there was yet time.

GINA. What would you have done then?

HiALMAR. Then of course I should have had nothing to say to you.

GINA. Yes, that's what I thought; and that's why I didn't say anything.

HiALMAR. Unsuspecting fool that I was to imagine that you had a great love for me!

GINA. That has come with years, Ekdal; as true as I stand here. Oh yes, I'm fond of you, indeed I am, more than any one else can be.

HiALMAR. I don't want to know anything about that. What are you now in my eyes; you who could yield to a middle-aged married man?

GINA. Yes, I can't think now how I could do it.

HiALMAR. Can't you? Perhaps you have become moral with years. But then—how in the world could you enter into such a thing?

GINA. Oh, you must know, Ekdal, it isn't so easy for poor girls. The rich men begin by degrees with presents and so on—HIALMAR. Yes, ready money, you're very fond of that.

GINA. It was mostly jewellery and clothes and that sort of thing.

HIALMAR. And of course you have sent it all back to him long ago.

GINA. I've worn out the clothes, and I sold the gold things one by one when we were wanting money—

HIALMAR. We've been living on that man's money. Everything we have in the house comes from him!

GINA. Ever since we were married I haven't seen a penny of his; and I don't believe I've seen him once.

HIALMAR. But the copying!

GINA. Bertha got me that, when she went to keep house for him.

HIALMAR. Yes, you and Bertha, you're both of the same sort.

GINA. Tell me, Ekdal—haven't I been a good wife to you?

HIALMAR. And what haven't you to thank me for! Haven't I raised you from an inferior position? Haven't I given you a name to bear?—yes, a name—for it shall come to be respected and honoured again.

GINA. That don't make any difference to me.

HIALMAR. Doesn't it? Oh well, I can quite believe it.

GINA. Yes, because I love you as you are, Ekdal; even if you never do the great things you're so fond of talking about.

HIALMAR. That's your lower nature showing itself. I am misunderstood in my own home; I have always been misunderstood by you.

GINA. But I've been a good wife to you, all the same.

(GREGERS WERLE comes in from the passage door.)

GREGERS (in the doorway). May I come in?
Hialmar. Yes, come in.
Gregers. Have you not done it yet?
Hialmar. It is done.
Gregers. It is?
Hialmar. I have passed through the bitterest moments of my life.
Gregers. But also, I trust, the most ennobling.
Hialmar. Well, at any rate, we have got through it for the present.

Gina. God forgive you, Mr. Werle.
Gregers. But I don’t understand this.
Hialmar. What don’t you understand?
Gregers. A crisis so great as this—so exhaustive—a crisis that is to be the starting-point of an entirely new life—a life founded on truth—
Hialmar. Yes, yes, I know, I know.
Gregers. I was so confident that when I came in after this, I should find the light of a higher transfiguration shining over your home; and now I am met by this dulness, oppression, gloom—
Gina. Oh, is that it? (Turns up the lamp.)
Gregers. Or tell me frankly, Mrs. Ekdal, is it not a joy to you to be rid of this burden of concealment?
Gina. I must tell you, Mr. Werle, that I’ve had so little time to remember all these old stories.
Gregers. I should have thought that they were never out of your thoughts for a day, for an hour.
Gina. I’m sure I’ve had all I could do to look after the house. And since I’ve been married no one can say anything but that I’ve been upright and respectable.
Gregers. Your whole view of life is incomprehensible to me—so widely, so immensely different from my own. But you, Hialmar—surely you feel a new consecration after such a moment?
HIALMAR. Yes, of course I do. That is—in a sort of way—

GREGERS. The joy of forgiving one who has erred, of raising one who has strayed up to yourself in love—

HIALMAR. Do you think a man can so easily throw off the effects of an hour such as I have passed?

GREGERS. No, not a common man—perhaps; but a man like you—!

HIALMAR. Good God! I know that well enough. But it takes time, you know.

GREGERS. You have been too long at the bottom of the sea, Hialmar; you have bitten yourself fast there; and so it always hurts at first when one comes up into the clear daylight.

HIALMAR. You are right there; it hurts.

GREGERS. Yes, for there is too much of the wild duck in you. (RELLING comes in from the passage.)

RELLING. Oho! is the wild duck on the tapis again?

GREGERS. Yes, for it is the evil spirit of the house. Ah, it is not without significance that it came from Mr. Werle.

RELLING. So it's Mr. Werle you are talking about?

HIALMAR. Him and—certain others.

RELLING (turning to GREGERS). May the devil fly away with you.

HIALMAR. Then perhaps you know it too!

RELLING. Oh, never mind what I know or don't know. From that quarter one can expect all kinds of things.

GREGERS. Yes, but I who know, am I not to speak! Am I to look on while two dear, good creatures come to grief because they are living their life on a false foundation?
Relling. But it's no business of yours. You must leave off playing the quacksalver with my patients.

Hialmar. Patients?

Relling. Oh yes, there's always somebody who's in need of a doctor. But you don't understand that, Mr. Werle.

Gregers. I know from experience what it is to have a gnawing conscience, such as has poisoned my life; but here I found my life's mission. Now I am so happy. And should I not then open the eyes of two people, who have such a profound need of seeing?

Relling. What is it that they are to see?

Gregers. The truth. The recognition that their association has not until to-day been a true marriage.

Relling. Do you think it will be truer hereafter?

Gregers. Yes, I have a cheerful hope of that.

Relling. Of course; people like you are always uncommonly hopeful. Time after time you're taken in, made fools of—hasn't that happened to you?

Gregers. Certainly; I have suffered many disappointments.

Relling. And yet you have a cheerful hope.

Gregers. But here is something different, something out of the common. An individuality like Hialmar Ekdal's—

Relling. Ekdal——!

Hialmar. Yes, that may be true enough, but——

Relling. Very well, Ekdal, then. But you see, his mission lies elsewhere; he doesn't need any better marriage than that he has lived in hitherto.

Gina. Yes, don't you think so, Relling! We were getting on so well——

Hialmar. You don't understand the claims of the ideal.
Relling. No, you see, Hialmar Ekdal will come out all right; he can't come to grief altogether. He has his great problem to wrestle with—— Hialmar. Yes, my problem—I have that, of course.

Relling. And when that is solved, he will once more have cast honour and glory upon the name of Ekdal.

Hialmar. I hope so, in any case.

Gregers. Well, the problem is all very well; but it is something that lies outside the individuality, something purely scientific, or technical, or whatever you like to call it. And it is impossible for such a thing to satisfy an individuality such as Hialmar's. Or do you think it satisfies you?

Hialmar. No, not entirely, I think——

Gregers. There, you see, Doctor Relling. And if it does not satisfy his individuality now, when that individuality has not developed into perfect freedom——well, let me put a question to you; do you think any great problem can be solved by an imperfect individuality?

Relling. Do you mean that photography cannot be raised to an art so long as the photographer's relation to his wife is not a true marriage?

Gregers. You put it rather bluntly; but I have such an unfailing belief in the powers of development of true marriage——

Relling. Excuse me, Mr. Werle, have you seen many true marriages?

Gregers. No, scarcely a single one.

Relling. Nor I either.

Gregers. But I have seen marriages of the opposite kind; and what ruin they can work in a human soul——
RELLING. And from them you draw your conclusions. Well, well, Ekdal, now you know what is wanted for your great discovery.

GINA. But you shouldn't talk so much about that invention, Relling, for it won't come to anything after all.

HIALMAR. Won't come to anything!

RELLING. Well, that's a fine thing to say!

HIALMAR. My problem won't come to anything, do you say!

GINA. No, I'm pretty sure it won't. You've been waiting all this time to find out something; and you're just where you were——

RELLING. Such things often come about by a sort of revelation, Mrs. Ekdal.

HIALMAR. But she doesn't understand that.

GINA. Well, revelations are all very fine, but you want something else besides. I should think it would be better if you worked with the instruments you've [we've] got, Ekdal; and then other people can find out these new ones.

HIALMAR. Not understood; not understood in one's own home. (Sees HEDVIG.) Yes, she understands me. Or do you not believe in me either, Hedvig?

HEDVIG. What am I to believe in, father?

HIALMAR. You are of course to believe in me in a general way, to believe in my mission, and to believe in the problem.

HEDVIG. Yes, I believe you will one day find it out.

HIALMAR. H'm——

GINA. Hush, there's a knock.

(Goes toward the passage door.)

(Mrs. Sörby comes in.)

GINA. Is it you, Bertha?

MRS. SÖRBY. Yes, of course it is.
HIALMAR. If you have anything to say to Gina, won't you go in—(Indicating the sitting-room.)
MRS. SÔRBY. Thanks, I'd rather stay here. I have a message from Mr. Werle.
HIALMAR. What does he want with us!
GREGERS. Perhaps it is something about me.
MRS. SÔRBY. At any rate, he wishes you to know it.
To begin with, a somewhat important change is impending in Mr. Werle's domestic and other relations.
GREGERS. Aha!
MRS. SÔRBY. Mr. Werle has decided to make over the business here to Grâberg, and will himself move up to the works.
GREGERS. He will!
HIALMAR. Really, will Mr. Werle move up to the works?
RELLING. He won't stand that for long; it will be much too lonely.
MRS. SÔRBY. Well, he won't be altogether alone either.
GREGERS. Ah, then it's coming off after all?
MRS. SÔRBY. Yes.
RELLING. What's coming off?
HIALMAR. I don't understand a word.
GREGERS. I must explain the situation. My father and Mrs. Sôrby are going to be married.
HIALMAR. Going to be married!
GINA. Oh! so it's come to that at last!
RELLING. This is surely not true?
MRS. SÔRBY. Yes, it is true; he has got a special license and goes up there this evening. And I think of going to-morrow morning. Well, now I have told you; so it is over.
RELLING. So that was the end of it.
GREGERS. What do you think this will lead to, Mrs. Sörby?

MRS. SÖRBY. To good, I think. Mr. Werle is not nearly so difficult to get on with as some people think.

GREGERS. No doubt you have no cause to complain.

MRS. SÖRBY. Oh no; he may be unreasonable now and then; but I have been through worse things, Mr. Werle. And of course one is glad to be provided for.

RELLING. And Mr. Werle is the man to provide for you. He's no beggar.

MRS. SÖRBY. There are many who need not be beggars, if only they had put their whole hearts into something.

RELLING. Put their whole hearts—tell me, how much would that help?

MRS. SÖRBY. Ah, a man can be so far gone that he no longer has a heart for anything.

RELLING. I shall go out with Molvik this evening.

MRS. SÖRBY. You mustn't do that, Relling.

RELLING. There's nothing else for it.

(Goes out through the passage door.)

MRS. SÖRBY. And then there's another thing. No doubt some people think Mr. Werle ought to have done a little more for an old friend like Lieutenant Ekdal.

HIALMAR. Mr. Werle does a very great deal for father: he pays so liberally—

MRS. SÖRBY. Yes, for the copying; but now your father's getting old; his eyesight will not be equal to the work much longer; so here is an order to pay once for all. You or Gina can draw every month a hundred crowns for your father—

HIALMAR. Gina?
Mrs. Sörby. Yes, or you; just as you like. And when your father—well, when he no longer requires anything, it passes on to Hedvig.

Hialmar (draws back, as though stabbed). To Hedvig!

Hedvig. Fancy! All that money!

Hialmar. Hedvig! What do you say to that, Gina!

Gina. Mr. Werle must have thought that—

Mrs. Sörby. It seemed to him the most honourable way--; you see, Hedvig is a child; she can quite well accept it.

Hialmar. Yes, she has most claim to it, unless Gina herself—

Mrs. Sörby. Gina herself!—

Hialmar. But I, I, I, you see!

Hedvig. I won't take anything. You shall have it all, father.

Mrs. Sörby. What has happened here?

Hialmar. Something that ought to have happened long, long ago.

Mrs. Sörby. Already.

Gregers. I understand very well why father has arranged this. He wanted to convince me that Hialmar Ekdal was not the man I took him for.

Hialmar. He will be out in his calculations, then. Look here, Gregers. (Tears the paper across.) There, Mrs. Sörby, will you be so good as to give this back to Mr. Werle.

Mrs. Sörby. I won't take it.

Hialmar (throws it on the table). Then let it be. But tell him at all events that I have torn his deed of gift in pieces.

Gregers. And then ask your future husband who was right, he or I.
 Mrs. Sörby. I will. Good-bye, Gina; good luck to you.

(Mrs. Sörby goes.)

Hialmar (in a whisper). Now you're to answer me, as though you were on your oath: does Hedvig belong to me or not?

Gina. I don't know.

Hialmar. You don't know!

Gina. How should I know—; a creature like me.

Hialmar. And you brazen it out, too.—Gregers, tomorrow I leave this house.

Hedvig (with a scream). Father! Oh, no, no!

Gina. You'll never do that, Ekdal!

Gregers. Must it be so, Hialmar?

Hialmar. It must. I'm going at once. (Puts on his overcoat.) I shan't be home to-night

Hedvig (throws herself down on the sofa). He is going away from us! Father, father is going away from us! Oh, mother, mother!

Gina. You mustn't cry, Hedvig; he's sure to come back again.

Hedvig. No, he'll never come back again! Didn't he say so?

Gina. Don't you think he'll come back, Mr. Werle?

Gregers. I feel sure of it. Hialmar will come back to his home; and you will see how exalted he will return.

Hedvig. But what have we done to him? Mother, tell me what it is? Why doesn't he want me any more? Tell me that! Oh, tell me that!

Gina. Hush, hush, you'll know when you're older.

Hedvig. Yes, but I'll never be older if father doesn't want me.

(Bursts into sobs and tears.)
GINA. You musn’t cry, Hedvig; you mustn’t indeed. It does you harm; Doctor Relling said so.

HEDVIG. I can’t help it. Oh, mother, mother, fetch him home again——

GINA. Yes, I’ll go and look for him. Perhaps he’s only gone down to Relling’s. (Puts on her shawl.) But you must be quiet, Hedvig; promise me!

HEDVIG. Yes, yes.

GREGERS. Had you not better leave him to fight out his bitter fight to the end?

GINA. Oh, he can do that afterwards. First of all, we must get the child quieted.

(She goes out by the passage door.)

GREGERS. There now; cheer up, Hedvig. All may yet be well.

HEDVIG. Why doesn’t father want me any more, Mr. Werle? You must tell me that.

GREGERS. I can only say as your mother says: some day you will know.

HEDVIG. But I can’t go on waiting and being as miserable as this.

GREGERS. What right have you or any human being to be happy? What right, I ask.

HEDVIG. Oh, I don’t care about that; it is so lovely to be happy and cheerful.

GREGERS. There is something in life that is higher than that, Hedvig.

HEDVIG. Yes, but that doesn’t matter if only everything is right again at home, between father and mother and me. Don’t you think everything can come right between us?

GREGERS. I have a sure hope that some day everything will be right again between your father and mother.
HEDVIG. Yes, but me!

GREGERS. You must remember one thing, Hedvig: you are not destined to spend your whole life here at home.

HEDVIG. Oh yes, oh yes! I will always stay at home. I will never, never leave father and mother.—And then —just think—then father doesn’t want me any more!

GREGERS. You must wait and hope; your father has first to fight out his battle.

HEDVIG. But I can’t wait and be as miserable as this. Why doesn’t father want me any more? Am I not really father’s and mother’s child? Perhaps they only found me?

GREGERS. Found you? Well, it might be that your father believes something like that.

HEDVIG. Yes, but then mother can tell him that it isn’t true.

GREGERS. And supposing he doesn’t believe her.

HEDVIG. Well, but even if it was true, father might be just as fond of me for all that. We don’t know where the wild duck came from either, and yet we love it so intensely.

GREGERS. The wild duck. Yes, you love that wild duck so intensely, Hedvig.

HEDVIG. Yes, so intensely.

GREGERS. And the wild duck is your property, isn’t she?

HEDVIG. Yes, she belongs to me. But why——?

GREGERS. Have you anything else that you love so well?

HEDVIG. Oh no; nothing in the world.

GREGERS. Then you must sacrifice the dearest treasure you have——

HEDVIG. The wild duck!
Gregers. Yes, and get back your father's love instead.

Hedvig. But how can you think—

Gregers. He said so himself before he went; neither you nor the old man cared to make such a sacrifice for his sake; it is your love for him that he doubts; that is why he doesn't want you any more.

Hedvig. Oh, if it was only that—

Gregers. Show him that to win him back means more to you than anything in the world. Give up your dearest treasure, and give it gladly.

Hedvig. Ah, if that could only make everything come right again—

Gregers. You must not doubt the power of self-sacrifice; that is just what is ideal in family life, you see—

Hedvig. Oh, but I don't care about anything of that sort; I don't understand it.

Gregers. But don't you see that this would be a deed that bore the stamp of the uncommon; and for that very reason your father would recognise the kinship between you and him.

Hedvig. Do you think so?

Gregers. Yes, I'm sure of it. And your father would say: Hedvig is my child in spirit and in truth, even if she came from the ends of the earth.

Hedvig. Or from the depths of the sea.

Gregers. Yes, yes, from the depths of the sea, if you like.

Hedvig. And then everything might come right again between me and father? Oh, that would be splendid.

Gregers. Everything is splendid when one's course of life is raised to a higher plane. So the dearest you have must be sacrificed, Hedvig. Take your grandfather into the secret; get him to do it; look out for a time when he wants to go shooting—you know—

HEDVIG. Yes, yes, I know—

GREGERS. But don't tell your mother about it—

HEDVIG. Why not mother?

GREGERS. Because she would scarcely understand us.

(GINA comes in from the passage.)

HEDVIG. Mother! Did you find him?

GINA. No. I only heard as he had called and taken
Relling with him.

GREGERS. Are you sure of that?

GINA. Yes, the woman in the yard said so. Molvik went with them too.

GREGERS. This evening, when his mind so sorely needs to wrestle in solitude.

GINA. Yes, that's what I thought. The Lord only knows where they have gone to. They weren't at Madam Eriksen's.

HEDVIG (bursting into tears). Oh, if he never comes home any more!

GREGERS. He will come home again. And then you shall see how he comes home!—Good evening. And sleep in peace.  (He goes out by the passage door.)

HEDVIG (throws herself weeping on GINA's neck).
Mother, mother!

GINA. Ah yes, that's what comes of it when you have crazy creatures in the house.
FROM THE FIFTH ACT

GREGERS. What is your explanation of the mental agitation that is going on in Ekdal?

RELLING. Devil a bit of mental agitation do I think there is in him.

GREGERS. But can you think that an individuality like his——!

RELLING. Oh, individuality, individuality! I don't know what individuality is. Hjalmar Ekdal is a good-kind, well-behaved creature, whose chief wish is to live as comfortably and as free from care as he can manage.

GREGERS. He—who has to restore his name and the honour of his family.

RELLING. Yes, yes, I know all about that; he was drivelling about that last night. But how the devil should he be able to retrieve the past? Can you tell me that?

GREGERS. Have you forgotten the remarkable invention he is working at?

RELLING. So you believe in that invention in sober earnest?

GREGERS. Yes, certainly. And you believe in it yourself, too.

RELLING. No, look here, Mr. Werle—I may be something of a beast, but a fool I am not.

GREGERS. Well, anyhow you spoke highly enough of his endeavours yesterday.

RELLING. Deuce take it, can't you see why? All this about the remarkable invention is just the life-illusion that keeps him going.

GREGERS. Life-illusion?
RELLING. Yes, of course. Most people occupy themselves with an illusion that helps them to live their lives.

GREGERS. That would be a distressing state of things.

RELLING. Who said it was a cheerful state of things? It is so, and there's an end of it. The remarkable invention is to Ekdal what the daemonic nature is to Molvik.

GREGERS. Isn't it true with him either?

RELLING. An idiot like him—daemonic? How the devil can you believe such a thing? And there's nothing of the kind either. But if I hadn't given him that idea, he would have come to grief in self-contempt long ago.

GREGERS. And perhaps it is you who gave him the idea.

RELLING. Yes, I'm his doctor, you see; curing him is out of the question; but a little injection of illusion now and then—it acts as a palliative.

GREGERS. That may be; but it is not so with Hjalmar Ekdal.

RELLING. Isn't it? Rob Hjalmar Ekdal of his illusion, and you rob him of his happiness at the same stroke.

GREGERS. Ah, his illusion, I dare say. But what about his striving after the ideal?

RELLING. Good Lord, man! they are only two different names for the same thing. (To Hedvig, who comes in.) Well, Hedvig, I'm just going down to look after your father. (He goes out to the right.)

GREGERS. Have you enough courage and strength of will to-day?

HEDVIG. Well, I don't know; I don't seem quite able to believe in such a thing.
Gregers. Then let it be; without true resolution there is nothing in it. (Goes out to the right.)

(Hedvig is on the point of going into the kitchen when a knock is heard at the door to the garret; she goes over and opens it; old Ekdal comes out; she shuts the door again.)

Ekdal. It's no good being in there alone. What's become of Hialmar?

Hedvig. Wouldn't you like to shoot the wild duck, grandfather?

Ekdal. Hush, hush, don't talk like that. It's only something that comes over me. Old sportsman, you see.

Hedvig. Oughtn't they to be shot in the breast?

Ekdal. Under the wing, when you can manage it. And it's best a little from behind.

Hedvig. Do you often want to shoot her?

Ekdal. Needn't be afraid. I can make a rabbit do.

(Goes into his room.)

(Gina comes from the sitting-room and begins to clean up the studio. Presently the passage door is opened slowly; Hialmar is seen; he is without hat or overcoat, unwashed and with unkempt hair.)

Gina. There now, you've come at last!

Hialmar (comes in). I'm going again at once [this instant].

Gina. Yes, yes, I suppose so.

Hedvig (from the kitchen). Oh, father!

Hialmar (turns away and makes a gesture of repulsion).

Away, away, away!

Gina. Go into the sitting-room, Hedvig.

(Hedvig does so.)

Hialmar. I must have my books with me. Where are my books?

Gina. What books?
HIALMAR. My scientific books, of course; the technical magazines I require for my invention.

GINA (searches in the bookcase). Is it these here that isn't bound?

HIALMAR. Yes, of course.

GINA (lags them on the table). Shan't I get Hedvig to cut them for you?

HIALMAR. There is no need.

GINA. Then you still stick to it that you'll leave us?

HIALMAR. Yes, that is a matter of course, I should think.

GINA. But what about grandfather?

HIALMAR. He'll come with me. I am going out into the town to make arrangements—. H'm— Has anyone found my hat on the stairs?

GINA. No. Have you lost your hat?

HIALMAR. Of course I had it on when I came in; I'm quite certain of that; but I couldn't find it this morning.

GINA. If only you haven't caught cold, Ekdal.

(Goes out into the kitchen.)

(HIALMAR rummages among the papers and photographs on the table, finds the torn document of yesterday, takes it up and looks at it; sees GINA and puts it down.)

GINA (brings a tray with coffee from the kitchen). Here's a little something hot, if you'd fancy it.

HIALMAR (glances at it). Coffee!—Do you suppose I'm in the mood to drink coffee?—My manuscripts, my letters and my important papers. (Opens the sitting-room door.) Is she there too? Come out. (HEDVIG comes.)

In the last moment I spend here, I wish to be spared from interlopers.

(Goes into the room.)

GINA. Stay out in the kitchen, Hedvig.

(Goes into the sitting-room.)
HEDVIG (stands a moment immovable, biting her lips to suppress the tears; then clenches her hand and says softly:) The wild duck.

(She goes over to the garret door, slides it a little to one side, steals in and shuts it after her.)

HIALMAR (with some letters [manuscript books], which he lays on the table). Oh, there are a thousand and one things I must drag with me.

GINA. Yes, you won’t have an easy job getting everything in order. And now your coffee’s getting cold.

HIALMAR. H’m.

( Drinks a mouthful or two without thinking of it.)

GINA (dusting). A nice job you’ll have to find a room for the rabbits.

HIALMAR. What! Am I to have all those rabbits with me?

GINA. You don’t suppose father can get on without his rabbits.

HIALMAR. He must get used to doing without them. The pigeons too must remain here for the present. I must try to dispense with them. Henceforward there are many things I must dispense with.

( Takes a piece of bread and butter, eats it and drinks some coffee.)

GINA. If we hadn’t let that room, you could have moved in there.

HIALMAR. And remained under the same roof with you and her—her—that—

GINA. Hush, don’t talk so loud; father’s in the garret.

HIALMAR. What, is he in the garret again?

GINA. But couldn’t you move into the sitting-room for a day or two? You could have it all to yourself.

HIALMAR. Never within these walls.

GINA. Well then, down with Relling?
HiALMAR. Don’t mention that wretch’s name to me. The very thought of him makes me sick. Oh no, I must go out into the snow-drift and seek shelter for father and myself.

HiALMAR. Of course I shall leave this house as soon as possible. I am in the act of packing my things. I cannot go on living in a home that has fallen to pieces.

GINA. Will you give me the key of your chest of drawers, Ekdal?

HiALMAR. What do you want with it?

GINA. I’ll put your shirts into the portmanteau.

HiALMAR. Here! And keep it. I have no more use for it.

(GINA goes into the sitting-room.)

GREGERS. Do you really feel this a necessity?

HiALMAR. Do you not know me well enough to understand that I cannot live in a ruined home?

GREGERS. But this is just the moment when this home might be built up again on a foundation tenfold more secure than before; upon truth, forgiveness, reconciliation.

HiALMAR. Would you be able to approve of that?

GREGERS. My dear fellow, isn’t that just what I was aiming at?

HiALMAR. Yes, but then there is the awful, the desperate side of the situation, that happiness in any case is gone for ever! Just think of Hedvig, whom I have loved so dearly.

GREGERS. And who loves you so dearly, Hialmar.

HiALMAR. But that, you see, is what I cannot believe after this. Whatever she may say, whatever she may do, I shall always doubt her. For I can never know whether she is not acting from a sense of insecurity, from fear and a feeling that she has become, as it were, a stranger in the house.

GREGERS. Hedvig knows nothing of dissimulation. What if she now brought you her best possession as a sacrifice—would you not then believe in her?

HIALMAR. Oh, what sacrifice could she make that——

GREGERS. A small thing, perhaps; but to her the most precious. Let us just suppose that for your sake she gave up the wild duck.

HIALMAR. The wild duck? What would be the use of that?

GREGERS. To give up her most precious possession.

HIALMAR. This is overstrained talk. Even if she gave up the wild duck ten times over, there would still be a kind of concealed gulf between us. Both Hedvig and I would feel it and suffer. No, I tell you; happiness is past for us. Never again can Hedvig and I be on a footing of father and child.

(A shot is heard from within the garret.)

HIALMAR. What! Is he shooting again!

GINA (comes in). If only he doesn’t end by doing himself a mischief.

HIALMAR. I’ll look in——

GREGERS. Wait a moment. Do you know what that was?

HIALMAR. How—was?

GREGERS. It was a useless sacrifice that poor Hedvig made. She has got him to shoot the wild duck.

GINA. Are you sure of that?

GREGERS. I know it.

HIALMAR. The wild duck.

GINA. Yes, she’s been so tormented and despairing, Ekdal.
Gregers. And she knew no other way but to sacrifice to you the best she had.

Hjalmar. And I could be so harsh towards her! Where is she, Gina?

Gina (struggling with her tears). She's sitting out in the kitchen.

Hjalmar. It must and shall come right again. (Goes over and opens the kitchen door.) Hedvig, come in to me! —No, she's not here.

Gina. Isn't she? Then she must have gone out.

Hjalmar. Oh, if she would only come quickly, so that I can tell her— For I really didn't mean anything by it.

Gregers. You didn't mean anything by it?

Gina. It wasn't like you either, Ekdal.

Hjalmar. No, it was mostly on your account, Gregers. You came here and made such unreasonably heavy claims on me—

Gregers. Do you think that!

Hjalmar. Yes, you don't know me properly, you see: I am not altogether as you imagine me—I want everything to be pleasant and easy and comfortable—

Gina. Ekdal is not made to be unhappy—

Gregers. I'm beginning almost to believe that.

Hjalmar. Yes, and so I am going to stay here with Gina and Hedvig, just as before—

Gina. That's right.

Gregers. But, my dear fellow, that's exactly what I've been striving for.

Hjalmar. Yes, but you wanted it brought about by a lot of hocus pocus, that I don't understand at all.

Gregers. Ah, there can't be any doubt that it is I whose judgment was at fault.
HIALMAR. Yes, for, you see, we are not that sort, neither Gina nor I. But what has become of Hedvig? Oh, dear, I wish she would come. And then she shall hear that I care for her——

GINA. Just as much as she cares for you, Ekdal.

HIALMAR. And just as much as she cared for the wild duck.

GREGERS. The sacrifice has not been in vain after all.

HIALMAR. No. After this Hedvig shall be our wild duck——

(Old Ekdal appears at the door of his room.)

HIALMAR. Father!

GINA. Has he been firing in there?

EKDAL. So you go shooting alone, do you, Hialmar?

HIALMAR. Wasn't it you that fired that shot?

EKDAL. Me that fired?

GREGERS. Then she has shot it herself.

HIALMAR. What can it mean? (Runs to the garret door, tears it aside, looks in and calls loudly:) Hedvig!

GINA (going to the door). What is it?

HIALMAR. She's lying on the floor!

(Goes into the garret.)

GREGERS. Hedvig!

GINA. Hedvig! No, no, no! (Goes into the garret.)

EKDAL. What is it? Was it Hedvig——!

HIALMAR (carries Hedvig into the studio). She has wounded herself! Call for help!

GINA (runs into the passage and is heard calling:) Relling! Relling! Doctor Relling!

HIALMAR (lays Hedvig down on the sofa). She's coming to—she'll soon come to now. The pistol has gone off.—
Ek达尔. There was a bullet in it. She didn't know that. Didn't know it was loaded.

吉娜（who has come back）. Where has she hurt herself? I can't see anything.

（雷林格，and immediately after him 油维克，from the passage; the latter without his waistcoat and necktie, and with his coat open.）

雷林格. What's the matter here?

吉娜. Hedvig has shot herself.

Hi亚尔马. Come and help us!

雷林格. Shot herself!

（Goes over to the sofa and examines her.）

Hi亚尔马. It can't be dangerous; she is scarcely bleeding at all; it can't be——

雷林格. How did it happen?

Hi亚尔马. Oh, we don't know——!

吉娜. She wanted to shoot the wild duck——

雷林格. The wild duck?

Hi亚尔马. The pistol must have gone off.

雷林格. H'm!

Ek达尔. Shoot the wild duck. Don't understand a word of it. Won't hear any more.

（Goes into the garret.）

雷林格. The ball has entered the breast——

Hi亚尔马. Yes, but she's alive!

吉娜. Surely you see that Hedvig is dead.

Hi亚尔马. No, no, she must live. Only a moment. Only just till I can tell her——

雷林格. The bullet has gone through her heart;—internal hemorrhage. Death must have been instantaneous.

Hi亚尔马. Oh Gina, Gina, and I have done this to you!

吉娜. Perhaps I had no right to keep her though.
HiALMAR. Had I then a right to take her from you? From you, after all you have been to us for so many years.

GINA. She shall be laid on her own bed. Take and help me, Ekdal.

(She and HiALMAR take Hedvig between them.)

HiALMAR (as they are carrying her). Oh Gina, Gina, can you survive this.

GINA. We must help each other to bear it. I brought her into the world, and you took her out of the world;—so now at least she belongs to both of us.

(They carry her into the sitting-room.)

MOLVIK (stretches out his arms and mumbles). Blessed be the Lord! to earth thou shalt return, to earth thou shalt return.

RELLING (softly). Hold your tongue, Molvik; you're drunk. Go downstairs.

(HiALMAR and GINA carry the body into the sitting-room.)

RELLING (shuts the door after them, goes over to Gregers and says:) That pistol never went off by accident.

GREGERS. Are you quite sure of that?

RELLING. There's no doubt about it; from the way the powder has burnt the body of her dress—. She pressed the pistol right against her breast and fired.

GREGERS. I almost think that is how it happened.

RELLING. And can you say that you are free from guilt?

GREGERS. I intended it for the best.

RELLING. Yes, you wanted to bring about something you call a true marriage here; and then you made your calculations for only the husband and wife, but you forgot [left out] the child.
GREGERS. She could not bear the light of truth; it dazzled her eyes.

RELLING. Truth is not particularly wholesome for most people. Take away the illusion from a relationship, and you take away happiness at the same stroke.

GREGERS. If that held good, it would not be worth while to live one's life.

RELLING. Then do you think it's such an important thing to live your life?

GREGERS. Not I; on the contrary; but it isn't my destiny either to live my life; I have another mission.

RELLING. What mission is that?

GREGERS. To be the thirteenth at table. (Goes.)

RELLING. The devil it is.
ROSMERSHOLM
"WHITE HORSES"

_He_, the noble, refined nature, who has come round to a liberal point of view and from whom all his former friends and acquaintances have withdrawn. A widower; was unhappily married to a melancholy, half-mad wife, who ended by drowning herself.

_She_, his two daughters’ governess, emancipated, warm-blooded, somewhat remorseless in a refined way. Is regarded by their acquaintance as the evil spirit of the house; is the object of misinterpretation and scandal.

_Elder daughter_; is in danger of succumbing to inactivity and loneliness; highly gifted, without any application for her talents.

_Younger daughter_; observant; dawning passions.

The journalist; genius, vagabond.

DRAFT

In the drawing-room of the parsonage. Dialogue between S. and Miss B. The student comes in from a walk. The old retired apothecary calls on business; goes away. The family assembled. The cavalry captain. The magistrate and his daughter come to call and bring an invitation; it is accepted; then the change of views is to be disclosed. The family alone; conversation turns on the white horses.

DRAFT

1st Act

In the drawing-room of the country house. The clergyman and the young lady;

She is an intriguer and she loves him. She wishes to be his wife and she pursues this end with determination. Then he finds this out and she frankly admits it. There is now no more happiness in life for him. The daemonic in his nature is awakened by pain and bitterness. He desires to die, and she is to die with him. She does so.

FIRST ACT

Sitting-room at Boldt-Römer's. The room is old-fashioned but comfortable. On the right a large stove; farther back a door. In the back wall, a double door opening into the hall. To the left, two windows, with flowers in pots on the window-frames. By the farther window, a table with a sewing-machine; in the corner, on the right, a sofa with a table and easy chairs. On the walls, old family portraits, representing officers and clergymen. It is afternoon. The sun is shining into the room.

(Boldt-Römer is sitting in a rocking-chair in front of the stove, reading a magazine. Miss Radeck sits over by the window, working at the sewing-machine.)

Boldt-Römer (letting his book drop). H'm, it is strange for all that.
MISS RADECK (looking at him). What is it you mean?

BOLDT-RÖMER. It is strange for me to be sitting here—in Easter week—without anything to attend to; without anything to be responsible for.

MISS RADECK. But don't you feel that is a relief?

BOLDT-RÖMER. Yes, you may be sure I do. It's only at first—. Where are the girls to-day?

MISS RADECK. I expect they're down at the mill-pond skating.

BOLDT-RÖMER (rising). I didn't like to say so before. For they must have some amusement. But I so greatly dislike their skating down on the pond.

MISS RADECK. Oh, there's no danger at all. It's not so deep; and besides, the ice is perfectly safe.

BOLDT-RÖMER. I know that; it isn't that I was thinking of.

MISS RADECK (looking at him). I see, it's on account of—the other thing?

BOLDT-RÖMER. Yes. I think there is something uncanny in the children skating and playing and making a noise just over the spot that was their mother's death-bed.

MISS RADECK. But the girls know nothing about that.

BOLDT-RÖMER. No; but we know about it unfortunately; and therefore I cannot get rid of—. Well, well, I know of course it's meaningless; nothing but a sort of prejudice, or whatever we may call it; but nevertheless—

MISS RADECK. Then you haven't got over that kind of thing yet?

BOLDT-RÖMER. I doubt if I shall ever get over it entirely.
Miss Radeck. Then you ought to try whether you cannot recover your former standpoint.

Boldt-Römer. That? Never while I'm alive! That I neither can nor will do.

Miss Radeck. At all events it would have been better for you if you had never left it.

Boldt-Römer. And you can say that? To me? To me, who never knew what it was to be happy until I had achieved spiritual emancipation.

Miss Radeck. Oh, you have a long way to go yet before you achieve complete emancipation. I believe it would have been better for you if I had never entered your door.

Boldt-Römer. Then what should I have been now?

Miss Radeck. What you were before.

Boldt-Römer. Yes, that is true. A creature without breadth of vision; without the least understanding of the life of reality that is struggling and working around us.

Miss Radeck. Ah, but for all that; with a nature so gentle as yours; and then all that you have inherited and that has left its mark on you. Oh no, it's not so easy—. (Looks out.) Look; here comes the Rector.

Boldt-Römer. Who is it?

Miss Radeck. Your brother-in-law.

(Rector Hekmann enters from the hall.)

Hekmann. But what is this I see in the papers?

Rosenhjelm. Have the papers come?

Hekmann. Yes, and they say you have resigned your living.

Rosenhjelm. I've been thinking of it for a long time. I cannot continue. It is impossible.

Hekmann. One can understand very well that you cannot associate yourself with all these gloomy pietistic tendencies that have gained the upper hand in so many circles. But isn't it then your duty to counteract——

ROSENHJELM. Not as a clergyman. I cannot continue in that position.

H. That I don't understand.

R. I ought never to have taken orders. Nor was it of my own free will that I did so. But, you see, it was a family tradition. The Church and the Army by turns—from father to son. And as my father was a soldier, it was perfectly natural that I should take up theology.
At that time I thought myself that it was as it should be.

H. And now you had become so firmly fixed in it.
What will you turn to now—in the prime of life?

R. Well, I have all the affairs of the estate——

H. That won't fill up your time; and you have a steward and tenants too. No, it's no use making any more excuses. You must and shall take part in public life.

R. I had been thinking of that too—in my own way.

H. Not in any private way of your own. You must enter the ranks of the party. You can see well enough how great a need there is. Choose a special line. Oppose this Mortensgård who's stirring up all the ignorant mob. And now I hear he is thinking of starting a paper.

R. Is he? Well, the man has gifts. He knows how to write and speak.

H. Oh, my dear fellow, that's an easy matter when a man is not too particular as to the truth or the facts.

R. Well, I know so little of the facts in such matters.

H. But I know them. And I have had occasion to verify this Mortensgård. He is one of the most unprincipled pettifoggers we have in these parts. And that's saying a good deal, I can tell you.
R. But is it not the fact that these Radicals have accomplished much good in the last few years?

H. That I will never admit as long as I live. They? What good should they accomplish? Can any good come from such an impure source?

R. But have we the right to be so positive in our judgment of the source?

H. Don’t carry your humanity to extremes, my dear Rosenhjelm. And what is the good you have discovered? Perhaps you allude to the demagogues’ coup d’État?

R. I don’t understand such matters. But it seems to me that there is rather more independence in the ideas of individuals.

H. And you reckon that a good thing among people who are so unstable and immature? I think you are considerably mistaken. And I must say I am greatly surprised to hear such words from you. You who, after all, have inherited all your family’s respect for authority and good order.

R. Who knows?—perhaps one cannot altogether avoid being infected by the time one lives in.

H. Still I hope that will never be the case with either you or me. We will keep ourselves unstained. Will we not, Rosenhjelm?

R. To keep one’s self unstained, so far as possible, is undoubtedly the task of everyone.

H. Yes, and to spread purity around one, or in any case to keep contamination at a distance.

R. There I certainly agree with you.

H. Well, then you must also join us in acting, taking part in public life, combating all these fatal tendencies——

R. But, my dear fellow, if one is not made for any of this?
H. In a cultured society everyone is made to be a citizen.
R. Everyone?
H. I mean, of course, everyone who has the necessary qualifications, everyone who possesses a certain modicum of education and intelligence, I don't ask for actual scholarship. But ordinary education and knowledge one ought really to be able to demand. Now that is what it would be so extremely beneficial to bring home to the masses.

WHITE HORSES
A PLAY IN FIVE ACTS
BY
HENRIK IBSEN
1886
FIRST ACT

An old-fashioned, but large and comfortable sitting-room at Rosmer's. On the right, a stove; farther back, on the same side, a door. In the back wall, folding-doors opening into the hall. To the left, two windows, with flowers in pots on a stand. Beside the stove a sofa with table and easy chairs. On the walls, old family portraits representing officers and clergymen. It is late afternoon. The winter sun shines into the room.

(MRS. ROSMER is standing by the farthest window, arranging the flowers. MADAM HELSET enters from the right with a basket of table linen.)
Madam Helset. I suppose I had better begin to lay the tea-table, ma’am?

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, please do. He must soon be in now.

Madam Helset (laying the cloth). No, he won’t come just yet; for I saw him from the kitchen—

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, yes—

Madam Helset. —on the other side of the mill-pond. At first he was going straight across the foot-bridge; but then he turned back—

Mrs. Rosmer. Did he?

Madam Helset. Yes, and then he went all the way round. Ah, it’s strange about such places. A place where a thing like that has happened—there—. It stays there; it isn’t forgotten so soon.

Mrs. Rosmer. No, it is not forgotten.

Madam Helset. No, indeed it isn’t.

(Goes out to the right.)

Mrs. Rosmer (at the window, looking out). Forget. Forget, ah!

Madam Helset (in the doorway). I’ve just seen the Rector, ma’am. He’s coming here.

Mrs. Rosmer. Are you sure of that?

Madam Helset. Yes, he went across the mill-pond.

Mrs. Rosmer. And my husband is not at home.

Madam Helset. The tea is ready as soon as you want it.

Mrs. Rosmer. But wait; we can’t tell whether he’ll stay.

Madam Helset. Yes, yes. (Goes out to the right.)

Mrs. Rosmer (goes over and opens the door to the hall). Good afternoon; how glad I am to see you, my dear Rector!
Rector Gylling (taking off his overcoat). Thanks. Then I am not disturbing you?

Mrs. Rosmer. Oh no, how can you think so? On the contrary.

Rector Gylling (coming in). Well, that's all right. But where's your husband?

Mrs. Rosmer. He has only gone for a little walk. I think he'll be in directly. Won't you sit down till he comes?

Gylling (sits down by the stove). Many thanks. There is something I should like to speak to him about.

Mrs. Rosmer (sits down at the table). That is fortunate, for it has given us a chance of seeing you at last. How is it you haven't been near us before?

Gylling. Oh, it doesn't do to make oneself a nuisance to young married people.

Mrs. Rosmer (smiling). H'm—we are not so very young, you know.

Gylling. Well, newly-married anyhow. But I have been away too, as you know, for a couple of weeks.

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, we have heard of you at political meetings.

Gylling. I've turned political agitator, as the radical papers call it—in speaking of us. Or perhaps you never see those papers?

Mrs. Rosmer (quickly). Oh yes, we see them now and then—

Gylling. Well, then you have seen, I suppose, how I have been abused and slandered? What rough treatment I have had to put up with?

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, but it seems to me you gave as good as you got.

Gylling. So I did, though I say it that shouldn't. If I have to appear in public, I am certainly not the man to turn the other cheek.—But don’t let us get upon the subject of that painful and irritating wrangle. Tell me now—how do you like being mistress of the house?

Mrs. Rosmer (in a lower tone). I feel in every way so unspeakably happy.

Gylling. Well, I’m heartily glad of it. Nor could it be otherwise. A husband like Eilert Rosmer!* And then the fact that you do not find yourself amid strange surroundings which you have to accustom yourself to. For this house and everything belonging to it has been like a home to you for a long time. The only difference is that now it is all your own.

Mrs. Rosmer (moving a little nearer). My dear Rector, you say that so sincerely that I cannot think there is any ill-feeling lurking in the background.

Gylling. Ill-feeling? Why, what do you mean?

Mrs. Rosmer. It would be only natural if you felt a little hurt at seeing another in possession, where you were accustomed to see your own sister until a year or two ago. But you don’t feel that? (Giving him her hand.) Thanks, my dear Rector! Thanks, thanks for that!

Gylling. But tell me, how on earth did you get such an idea into your head? That I should object—now that my poor sister is gone—that I should now object to your taking her empty place—to your making Rosmer happy—after all his melancholy experience—and to your being yourself happy after all your untiring care for her—for her, that poor irresponsible creature, who chose to—who ended by—leaving it all.

Mrs. Rosmer. Oh, don’t let us speak of these gloomy things. Don’t let us think of them.

Gylling. No, let us not. Let us keep to what is bright. Tell me now, Mrs. Rosmer—. But first one thing—; may I be allowed to call you Agatha, as she did?

Mrs. Rosmer (joyfully). Oh yes, please do. (Shaking his hands.) Thanks, thanks for wanting to!

(Eilert Rosmer comes in from the right.)

Mrs. Rosmer. Rosmer, do you see who is here?

Rosmer. Madam Helset told me. (Pressing the Recto'r's hands.) Welcome back to this house, old friend. I knew that sooner or later things would come all right between us.

Gylling. Why, man, do you mean to say you too have been so foolish as to fancy that I was on a strained footing with you?

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, only think, it was nothing but fancy after all.

Rosmer. Is that really the case, Gylling? Then why did you desert us so entirely?

Gylling. Because my presence would always have been reminding you of the years of your unhappiness, and and of—the life that ended in the mill-pond.

Rosmer. Well, it was a kind and considerate thought of yours, Gylling. But I must tell you that it was altogether unnecessary. Neither Agnete nor little Alfred is a memory that it pains us to dwell upon. On the contrary. We often speak of them. We feel almost as if they still belonged to the household.

Gylling. Do you really? Can you do that?

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, why not——?

Rosmer. It is quite natural. Both Agatha and I were so deeply attached to those who are gone. Oh, it is a great happiness to have nothing to reproach oneself with——

Gylling. Henceforward, I declare I shall come out and see you every day.
Mrs. Rosmer. Oh, if you would do that!

Rosmer. I wish very much that our intercourse had never been interrupted. There are many things that I would give a great deal to talk over with you, quite frankly,—straight from the heart.

Mrs. Rosmer. Ah yes, Rosmer! Do so now.

Gylling. Oh I can tell you I have no less to talk to you about. I suppose you know I have turned agitator?

Rosmer. Yes, so you have.

Gylling. It's quite impossible now for any thoughtful and right-minded man to stand idly looking on any longer. Now that the Radicals have really come into power, it is time for all well-disposed citizens to unite—it is high time, I say——

Mrs. Rosmer (with a suppressed smile). Don't you think it may even be a little late?

Gylling. Unquestionably it would have been better if we had checked the stream at an earlier point in its course. But who could foresee what was going to happen? Certainly not I. But now I have had my eyes opened once for all; for, would you believe it? now the spirit of revolt has crept into the school itself.

Rosmer. Into the school? Into your school?

Gylling. I tell you it has. Into my own school. What do you think? It has come to my knowledge that the sixth-form boys—a number of them at any rate, have formed a society, and they take in Mortensgård's paper.

Rosmer. H'm——

Mrs. Rosmer. I have generally noticed that young men are not inclined to be Radicals.

Gylling. Most of them are not. That is perfectly true. Most of us, thank God, are still at that age so far subject to respect for authority, both at home and in school, that we do not lend an ear to immature criticism of recognised institutions. But unfortunately there are exceptions to the rule. And to us schoolmasters it is a melancholy fact that the very boys who are best equipped with mental ability form the exceptions.

MRS. ROSMER. Yes, I have noticed that too.

GYLLING. But that makes them all the more dangerous, these few black sheep. They are capable of infecting my whole flock. The whole school. You see, that is why I have not hesitated to take an active part in these political meetings and to warn people against the corrupt spirit that has appeared among us for the moment.

ROSNER. But have you any hope that the tide can be stemmed in that way?

GYLLING. At any rate I shall have done my duty as a citizen in defence of the State. And I hold it the duty of every right-minded man with an atom of patriotism to do likewise. In fact, that was my principal reason for coming out here to-day——

ROSNER. What? Do you mean that I should——?

MRS. ROSMER. But, my dear Rector, you know his distaste——

GYLLING. He must get over it. (To ROSMER.) You don't keep abreast of things. You cannot imagine the state things are in, all over the country. There isn’t a single accepted idea that hasn’t been turned topsy-turvy. It will be a gigantic task to get all the errors rooted out again.

ROSNER. I have no doubt of it. But I am the last man to undertake such a task.

MRS. ROSMER. Rosmer, I think it is time you spoke out frankly,
GYLLING. You are too shy, Rosmer. You hold yourself too much aloof from life. You gave up your living—

ROSMER. Well, now I will speak. Why do you think I gave up my living?

GYLLING. Oh, I know that well enough. I don't think there was anything surprising in your feeling the unpleasantness of not being able to join in the pietistic tendencies which then found favour in so many circles here.

ROSMER. I ought never to have taken orders, never to have entered upon that class of studies; that is the main point.

GYLLING. But, my dear fellow, then you would have broken with one of the best and most unalterable traditions of your family. Eilert Hannibal Rosmer was a soldier. Consequently his son, Eilert Alfred Rosmer, had to be a clergyman. Thus it has alternated for over two hundred years. I am well acquainted with these things, from my work on the family pedigree.

ROSMER. Yes, and no doubt it was that which determined me in those days. Or rather, there was no question of a determination on my part. Father—h'm, you know he was a martinet in his family circle as well as in his regiment—father would have it so, and there was an end of it.

GYLLING (with a sigh). Ah, that was in the days of decent social conditions!

ROSMER. And I, unfortunately, must have belonged to the class of young men you were talking of just now—those with a poor mental equipment.

GYLLING. You! How on earth do you make that out?

ROSMER. Why, there wasn't a spark of rebellious spirit in me then.
GYLLING. No, with God's help that spirit will never possess you.

ROSNER. Yet I have come to take a wider view of life than I used to.

GYLLING. Look here, Rosmer—surely you are not so weak as to be influenced by the accident that the leaders of the mob have won a temporary advantage?

ROSNER. I am little acquainted with these questions; but I confess it seems to me that within the last few years people are beginning to show greater independence of thought.

GYLLING. And what if they are? Would you really take that to be an improvement among unstable and immature people? But in any case you are quite mistaken. Or what kind of ideas and opinions are they that are rife among the malcontents in your rural district? Are they not the same ideas and opinions that excite the ill-disposed in the town? Yes, precisely. And do you suppose the mob sucks these ideas and opinions from its own breast? No, of course not—they find them in Peder Mortensgård's paper. And that's an appetising source to draw from!

MRS. ROSNER. It can't be denied that Mortensgård knows how to write.

GYLLING. Yes, but, good heavens—a man of his foul antecedents! Well, the Radicals are not very particular as regards moral character. That is why he is a dangerous man, this Mortensgård. He is one of the most dangerous we have here. And he may give us even more trouble in the future. For now he is thinking of enlarging his paper; it is to appear daily; I know on good authority that he is looking for a capable assistant.

ROSNER. But why don't you and the others think of starting a paper in opposition to him? Your friends in the town could provide the capital. I'm sure it would not be difficult——

GYLLING. Ah, now you've brought me to my real errand. That is the very thing we have thought of. As far as the money question is concerned, the undertaking is assured. But the conduct of the paper—the editing, Rosmer. Tell me—don't you feel it your duty to undertake it, for the sake of the good cause?

ROSMER. I!

MRS. ROSMER. Oh, how can you ask——!

GYLLING. I should be quite willing to try my hand at that style of work too; but it is altogether impossible. I have such a multitude of irons in the fire already. But for you, with no profession to tie you down——

ROSMER. In any case I have the management of the estate.

GYLLING. Nonsense; the management of your estate doesn't take up much of your time.

ROSMER. But nevertheless, it is quite impossible. I feel so altogether unsuitable——; I am not fitted——

GYLLING. You can never know that until you have tried. Besides, the rest of us would give you as much help as we could. And then, too, you start with an immense advantage in the unbounded prestige you enjoy in the whole county. No other man can compare with you in that respect. The name of Rosmer—good heavens—the family of Rosmer, that from time immemorial has stood as the symbol of all that is old and good and just and upright. That, you see, is just what will enable you to act with tenfold weight.—What do you say, Mrs. Rosmer?

MRS. ROSMER (laughing). My dear Rector, I can't tell you how ludicrous all this seems to me.

GYLLING. What do you say? Ludicrous?
Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, ludicrous. For you must let me tell you frankly—

Rosmer. No, let me say it myself—

(Madam Helset appears in the doorway on the right).

Madam Helset. There's a man out in the kitchen passage says he wants to see Pastor Rosmer.

Rosmer. Oh? Ask him to come in.

Madam Helset. Into the sitting-room?

Rosmer. Yes, of course.

Madam Helset. But he looks scarcely the sort of man to bring into the sitting-room.

Mrs. Rosmer. Why, what does he look like, Madam Helset?

Madam Helset. Well, he's not much to look at, ma'am.

Rosmer. Did he not give his name?

Madam Helset. Yes, he said his name was Uldric.

Rosmer. Ulric?

Madam Helset. Yes, and then he gave another name. I think it sounded like Rosen—holm, or something like that.

Rosmer. Ulric Rosen—? Surely it can't be Ulric Rosenhjelm?

Madam Helset. Yes, that's what he said.

Mrs. Rosmer. That unfortunate Ulric Rosenhjelm.

Gylling. That black sheep Rosenhjelm. So he's in these parts.

Rosmer. Ask him to come in, Madam Helset.

Madam Helset. Oh, very well. (Goes out.)

Gylling. Are you really going to have an individual like that in your house?

Rosmer. I knew him a little in the days of his prosperity.
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Mrs. Rosmer. Didn't you know him too, Rector?

Gylling. Never personally. H'm——.

(Madam Helset opens the door on the right for Ulric Rosenhjelm, and then withdraws, shutting the door behind him. He has unkempt hair and beard, and is dressed like a common tramp. No overcoat; worn-out shoes; no shirt visible. He wears an old pair of black gloves; a bowler hat under his arm and a stick in his hand.)

Rosenhjelm (hesitates at first, then goes quickly up to the Rector, and holds out his hand). How are you, Rosmer!

Gylling. Excuse me; (points) there——

Rosenhjelm (turns). Right, yes; there he is. How are you, Rosmer. I could not pass by the house without paying you a visit.

Rosmer. Travellers are always welcome here.

Rosenhjelm. I had no card on me; but I hope the elderly lady I met outside has announced me? Well, that's all right. (Bows.) Ah, Mrs. Rosmer, of course. And there? A brother of the cloth, I see.

Rosenhjelm. Gylling? Gylling? Wait a bit; weren't you a student of philology?

Gylling. Of course I was.

Rosenhjelm. Why, devil take it, then I knew you——

Gylling. Pardon me——

Rosenhjelm. Weren't you——

Gylling. Pardon me——

Rosenhjelm. —one of those who got me expelled from the Students' Club?

Gylling. Certainly; but I disclaim any closer acquaintance.
ROSMERSHOLM

ROSENHJELM. Well, well; nach Belieben, Herr Rector. It's all one to me. I remain the man I am for all that.

MRS. ROSMER. You are on your way into town, Mr. Rosenhjelm?

ROSENHJELM. Yes, gracious lady, I am. I feel almost ashamed of not knowing this part of the country. What is the state of feeling in this town? You see, I'm thinking of getting up an evening entertainment.

MRS. ROSMER. What is it to consist of?

ROSENHJELM. Whatever may be to the taste of the public. Could you not give me some good advice, Rector? I will take the liberty of paying you a visit.

GYLLING. Thanks; but you'd better apply direct to Peder Mortensgård.

ROSENHJELM. Mortensgård? Don't know any Mortensgård. What sort of an idiot is he?

GYLLING. Why do you call the man an idiot, if you don't know him?

ROSENHJELM. Can't I tell at once by the name that it belongs to a plebeian?

GYLLING. Oh? I didn't expect that answer.

ROSENHJELM. Perhaps you think that Ulric Rosenhjelm hob-nobs with Tom, Dick and Harry?

GYLLING. So far as I know, you used to be specially interested in the lower orders of society.

ROSENHJELM. Yes, I was; and I had to suffer for it. Persecution from those in authority; ridicule, scorn and mockery from the thousands of indifferent people who will not understand anything—and ingratitude from the oppressed, whom I tried to help. Look at me. Here you see Ulric Rosenhjelm, who belonged to good society, to the best society—and who was the first in good society. They turned me out because I had the ability and the courage to say and write things that the polite world would rather have hidden. Now I never go into good society—except when I am alone.

Gylling. It may not be merely ability or opposition that determine one's destiny. It may also be one's mode of life.—

Rosenhjelm. I understand. We have an official code of morality, and I have not lived in harmony with it. However, I am tired of that too. I will put on the new man, as it is written somewhere. Is there such a thing as a Temperance Society in the town? A Total Abstinence Society? I need scarcely ask.

Gylling. Yes; I am the president.

Rosenhjelm. I saw that in your face! Well, it is by no means impossible that I may come to you and enroll myself as a member.

Gylling. Yes; I must tell you that we don't receive everybody without further ceremony.

Rosenhjelm. À la bonne heure! Ulric Rosenhjelm has never forced himself into that sort of Society. But I must not prolong my visit. I must be on my way to the town and look out for a lodging. I presume there is a decent hotel in the place.

Mrs. Rosmer. Mayn't I offer you anything before you go?

Rosenhjelm. Of what sort?

Mrs. Rosmer. A cup of tea, or——

Rosenhjelm. No, no, thanks. I am always loath to trespass on private hospitality. Good-bye. Oh, by the way, Rosmer; for the sake of our old friendship, will you do me a service?

Rosmer. Yes, gladly. What is it?

Rosenhjelm. You see, I am travelling on foot. My things won't arrive till later. Will you lend me a shirt for a day or two?
Rosmer. With all my heart. Is there nothing else?
Rosenhjelm. Could you spare an overcoat?
Rosmer. Yes, yes; certainly I can.
Rosenhjelm. And perhaps a pair of winter boots—I have nothing but spring shoes with me.
Rosmer. That I can manage too. As soon as you let me know your address, I will send the things in.
Rosenhjelm. Not on any account. So much trouble. I will take the trifles with me.
Rosmer. As you please. Come here with me then. Mrs. Rosmer. Let me go. Madam Helset and I will see to it.
(Goes out to the right.)
Rosmer. Is there nothing else I can do for you?
Rosenhjelm. No, thanks. Well, yes, damn it, I'd forgotten—do you happen to have ten crowns in your pocket?
Rosmer. I expect so. (Opens his purse.) Here are fifteen.
Rosenhjelm. Well well, thanks, never mind. Thanks in the meantime. Remember you lent me fifteen. Good-bye, gentlemen.
(Goes out to the right. Rosmer takes leave of him, and shuts the door behind him.)
Gylling. What do you think of that! This is what has become of the brilliant Ulric Rosenhjelm!
Rosmer. Unfortunately; I have known it a long time.
Gylling. Yes, it was pretty well known. But to see it with one's own eyes! Such talent rendered useless by moral foulness—
Rosmer. Do you think he is past saving? Would it not be possible to raise him again?
Gylling. Oh, my dear fellow, how could that be managed?
Rosmer. I mean by going to work in a forebearing—kindly way with him, showing confidence in him, relying on his good intentions—[a kind of self-knowledge—]

Gylling. Then you do rely on those intentions?

Rosmer. I would gladly do so.

Gylling. In that case he might perhaps be useful to us. The brilliant style he was once master of—; his pitiless, slashing pen—; and it did not look as if he had any very friendly disposition towards the Radicals—

Rosmer. Do you mean that he might be placed in charge of the new paper?

Gylling. In charge! Heaven preserve us, how can you think of such a thing! No, on the contrary, he would of course have to be kept in the background until he had rehabilitated himself. He would have to apply himself to leading a decent life,—in any case to be careful and to avoid public scandal. And if he could so far conquer himself, and if he could be induced for a certain time to lend the good cause his bona officia—; observing the strictest anonymity, of course—

(Mrs. Rosmer has re-entered in the meantime.)

Rosmer. Has he gone?

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes.

Gylling. And now I must think about leaving too. It is beginning to get dark.

Mrs. Rosmer. Won't you take tea with us?

Gylling. No, no, thanks; I cannot.—Well, my dear friend, I won't press you further to-day. You must turn it over in your own mind—

Rosmer. Will you be at home to-morrow morning—?

Gylling. To-morrow? I'm sorry I can't say for certain—for—
Rosmer. Never mind, I'll enquire for you in any case. I want to talk to you, I want to have a long talk with you, my dear Gylling——

Gylling. You mean about the affair of the County News?

Rosmer. About that and other things.

Gylling (shaking his hand). You will be welcome, my dear friend. And I am sure you and I will soon agree as to what is the duty of a good and well-disposed citizen in these troublous times. Good-bye, Mrs. Rosmer! Good-bye, dear friends.

(Rosmer and Mrs. Rosmer accompany him into the hall. As he puts on his overcoat, loud conversation is heard, the words of which do not however reach the audience. Finally, "Good-bye, good-bye, good-bye," as the Rector goes. Rosmer and his wife re-enter the room.)

Mrs. Rosmer. What was that he was saying as I came in? I understood that he wanted to try Rosenhjelm on the new paper.

Rosmer. He threw it out casually as a possibility. But nothing is likely to come of it.

Mrs. Rosmer. No, I should hope not. At all events I have done my best that nothing shall come of it.

Rosmer. You, my dear? What have you done?

Mrs. Rosmer. Now you won't be vexed with me for acting on my own responsibility, will you? Such good friends as we are?

Rosmer. Of course not; you may do everything you wish. But what was it?

Mrs. Rosmer. I gave Rosenhjelm a card of introduction to Mortensgård.

Rosmer. You did? To Mortensgård!
Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, I scribbled a few hurried words—

Rosmer. But you heard him call Mortensgård an idiot and a plebeian.

Mrs. Rosmer. We needn’t pay any attention to that. When a man has fallen so low as Rosenhjelm, he plays the gentleman. He thanked me too, and promised to deliver the card.

Rosmer. Oh, he did that? But perhaps Gylling will get hold of him to-morrow.

Mrs. Rosmer. If he has already compromised himself with Mortensgård’s paper, the County News won’t be able to make use of him.

Rosmer. And then it will come out that it was we who recommended him.

Mrs. Rosmer. What harm can that do? Haven’t you made up your mind to have it out to-morrow?

Rosmer. Yes, that’s settled. To-morrow it must and shall be done. But, dear me, how hard it is nevertheless to have to grieve one’s faithful friends—to cause them real heartfelt sorrow.

Mrs. Rosmer. Is that all, Rosmer? Is it not something that survives in you, without your knowing it?

Rosmer. My dear, what should it be? Do you mean uncertainty or doubt?

Mrs. Rosmer. Not exactly that.

Rosmer. No, you may depend upon that. I feel so free, so sure of myself. (Sits down beside her.) You have faithfully helped me. My former self is dead. I look upon it as one looks upon a corpse.

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, but that is just when these white horses appear.
Rosmer. White horses? What white horses?
(Madam Helset brings in the tea-urn and puts it on the table.)

Mrs. Rosmer. What was it you told me once, Madam Helset? You said that from time immemorial a strange thing happened here whenever one of the family died.

Madam Helset. Yes, it's as true as I'm alive. Then the white horse comes.

Rosmer. Oh, that old family legend—

Mrs. Rosmer. In it comes when the night is far gone. Into the courtyard. Through closed gates. Neighs loudly. Launches out with its hind legs, gallops once round and then out again and away at full speed.

Madam Helset. Yes, that's how it is. Both my mother and my grandmother have seen it.

Mrs. Rosmer. And you too?

Madam Helset. Oh, I'm not so sure whether I've seen anything myself. I don't generally believe in such things. But this about the white horse—I do believe in that. And I shall believe in it till the day of my death. Well, now I'll go and— (Goes out to the right.)

Rosmer (after a short silence). Do you mean that this can be applied to me?

Mrs. Rosmer. All the emancipated people I have known—all those who believe themselves to be emancipated—every one of them has had somewhere or other a white horse like this, which they never give up believing in.

Rosmer. And complete emancipation, you think, means—

Mrs. Rosmer. It means getting rid of one's white horses. [We must have light, Rosmer.]

Madam Helset [(in the doorway to the right)]. Here is the lamp, ma'am.
SECOND ACT

The sitting-room at Johannes Rosmer's. It is forenoon.
(Rosmer is walking about the room and putting on his overcoat. Mrs. Rosmer is brushing his hat, which she then hands to him.)

Rosmer. To think that I could have been so cowardly, so shy, so afraid of telling them everything frankly.

Mrs. Rosmer. Yes, was it not strange?

Rosmer. I don't understand it myself.

Mrs. Rosmer. But now it is over. There now. Go straight in to the Rector.

Rosmer. I'm going straight in——

Mrs. Rosmer. And then come back as soon as you can. I'm excited to hear what he will say.

Rosmer. Don't be too impatient. Good-by for the present. Good-by!

Mrs. Rosmer. Good-by, dear Rosmer!

(He opens the door to the hall. Mrs. Rosmer goes out with him. At the same moment Rector Gylling, in outdoor clothes, comes into the hall.)

Rosmer. What! Have you come here?

Gylling. Yes, I have.

Rosmer. And I was just on my way to you.

Gylling. I did not want to wait; and I was not so sure that you would come——

Rosmer. Well, take off your coat.

Gylling. If you will permit me.

(He takes off his overcoat and lays it on a chair. Rosmer does the same.)

Rosmer. Is there anything wrong with you? You look so serious.
GYLLING. I should be glad to speak to you in private. Could we go into your study?

MRS. ROSMER. It is not tidy yet. Stay here; I have to go out. (Goes out to the right.)

ROSMER. What is it then? Has Ulric Sejerhjelm been to see you?

GYLLING. No; and he's not likely to come either. But he is already being talked about. He introduced himself in a fine fashion.

ROSMER. Well?

GYLLING. He took up his quarters in a low house, spent the evening in a low tavern—in the lowest company of course—and drank and stood treat as long as he had any money; then he began abusing the whole company as a set of disreputable blackguards—and so far he was quite right;—whereupon they thrashed him and pitched him out of doors.

ROSMER. So he is incorrigible.

GYLLING. He had pawned the overcoat too; but I am told that has been redeemed for him. And can you guess by whom?

ROSMER. By whom then?

GYLLING. By Mr. Mortensgård. Sejerhjelm's first visit was to the "idiot" and "plebeian."

ROSMER. Rebecca prophesied that yesterday.

GYLLING. Indeed. And that brings me to a matter it is my duty to warn you about, for our old, faithful friendship's sake.

ROSMER. But, my dear Gylling, what can that be?

GYLLING. It is this: that there are things being done in this house independently of you and behind your back.

ROSMER. Who is doing this?

GYLLING. Your wife. I can quite understand it. Ever since the last sad years of Beata's life she has been accustomed to manage things here; but nevertheless——

ROSMER. My dear Gylling, you are utterly mistaken. Rebecca hides nothing from me. She tells me everything.

GYLLING. Then has she told you that yesterday she gave Sejerhjelm a card of introduction to Mortensgård?

ROSMER. Yes, of course.

GYLLING. She has—— And what do you say to that?

ROSMER. I altogether approve of what Rebecca has done.

GYLLING. Are you mad? You approve of her corresponding with the lowest and most dangerous opponent we have here?

ROSMER. I will tell you candidly. Mortensgård’s conduct on many occasions has been repulsive to you. But I can no longer side with you and our friends on public questions. In those matters and in many others I must entirely dissociate myself from you.

GYLLING (starting back). What do you say! You, you will dissociate yourself from your friends! Go over to the enemy’s camp! But that’s impossible!

ROSMER. I am not thinking of taking any part in the conflicts of the day. I have a horror of interfering in all this hubbub, of which I do not know the ins and outs.

GYLLING. But what are you going to do then?

ROSMER. I will try to ennoble the work of emancipation. Do you think I don’t see all the foulness that development brings with it and gives rise to in its course? That is what I want to oppose, to warn people against, to dam up, to confine, so that the stream may flow pure and clear——

GYLLING. Oh, Rosmer, what a confiding man you are! You don’t know what elements you will have to deal with. But when was it that you entered on these paths of aberration?

ROSMER. I call it comprehension.

GYLLING. Call it what you will. But when, I ask?

ROSMER. It goes back a long time. I believe the foundation was laid when I was engaged on my theological studies.

GYLLING. And yet you entered the Church?

ROSMER. Our family has always had great respect for the conventional.

GYLLING. That quality appears to be dying out in the family.

ROSMER. I think such things always die out—sooner or later—and then there is a reaction to the opposite.

GYLLING. But that this should come about through you! And that with such a turn of mind you could accept the position of a clergyman—

ROSMER. But as soon as I was perfectly clear I resigned.

GYLLING. Perfectly clear. About what?

ROSMER. I can no longer accept this mysticism. I must reject the whole of the old doctrine.

GYLLING. An apostate then! A free-thinker! An apostate from the faith of your fathers!

ROSMER. I have reasons for supposing that the faith of my fathers did not go very deep.

GYLLING. So you are an apostate. What have you now to fill up your life?

ROSMER. I will continue untiringly to investigate and think. I will try, as far as possible, to get to the bottom of things. And then I will live. Be happy.

GYLLING. Do you know that this opens an abyss of thoughts in my mind?

ROSMER. I don’t understand you.
GYLLING. Now I will go to the root of the whole matter. Will you be frank? Will you answer my questions candidly?

ROSMER. Speak, my dear Gylling, ask what you will. I have nothing to conceal.

GYLLING. What was the ultimate reason why Beata put an end to her life?

ROSMER. I don’t understand you. Can you have any uncertainty on the subject? And can one ever ask for reasons for what an unhappy, irresponsible invalid may do?

GYLLING. Are you certain that Beata was completely irresponsible for her actions? The doctors, at any rate, were by no means convinced of it.

ROSMER. If the doctors had ever seen her as I have so often seen her, they would have had no doubts.

GYLLING. I had no doubts either—then.

ROSMER. Unhappily there wasn’t the smallest room for doubt. I have told you of her unfortunate frenzies of passion, which she expected me to return. Oh, how they terrified me! And then her sudden changes of mood; her dumb, consuming hatred—

GYLLING. Hatred? Of whom?

ROSMER. Of us, who were about her. Of me, first and foremost—

GYLLING. And I have to tell you that poor unhappy Beata died of her love for you.

ROSMER. What do you mean by that?

GYLLING. In her last year—when it seemed to her that she could not bear her life any longer, she had recourse to me, to pour forth all her anguish—first, because she declared that you were on the road to perversion—

ROSMER. But I don’t think I was at that time. In any case I never confided to her my doubts and my inward conflicts.
GYLLING. That proves all the more clearly what a wonderfully true intuition a deranged person may have.

ROSMER. But why did you hide this from me?

GYLLING. I did not want to torture and harass you still further by disclosing these accusations, which I myself did not believe in at the time.

ROSMER. But now——?

GYLLING. Ah, now my eyes are opened to the incredible—to your great crime——

ROSMER. Crime!

GYLLING. Yes, to the criminal life that has been and is being led in your house.

ROSMER. I don’t understand a word of this.

GYLLING. Sometimes Beata came to me, weeping and lamenting. "Rosmer no longer loves me," she said. "He loves Rebecca; and she loves him."

ROSMER. She said that!

GYLLING. She said that. And that of course made me think her mad.

ROSMER. Yes, you must have thought so.

GYLLING. The last time she came to see me, she said: "Now no one must stand in the way of Johannes and his happiness. The White Horse must soon come now." I did not understand her.

ROSMER. Never did it occur to me that her diseased fancies had led her astray in that direction. My poor unhappy Beata.

GYLLING, Hypocrite!

ROSMER (with a start). What do you say!

GYLLING. Can I doubt any longer, after all these revelations, that a criminal life was being led here—even then?

ROSMER. Let me tell you that if any other man but you dared——
GYLLING. If it had been any other man but you, it would not have cut me to the heart like this. But you, Johannes Rosmer—to have to tear you out of my mind with a single wrench.

ROSMER. Tell me now: you did not at the time believe a word of these accusations of Beata's?

GYLLING. How could I believe such things of a man like you—a man of honour, for you were once that.

ROSMER. But now—?

GYLLING. Have you not confessed that you have long been secretly an apostate from the faith of your fathers?

ROSMER. I have long been in doubt and conflict. Now I see clearly where I stand; that is the truth. But what then?

GYLLING. The rest I can surely leave you to say to yourself.

ROSMER. No, I tell you; no; I cannot. You are bound to speak out what you mean without reserve.

GYLLING. I mean that there cannot be any vast gulf, any impassable abyss between free thought and—

ROSMER. And what—?

GYLLING. —and free love.

ROSMER. And you dare say this to me! You are not ashamed of thinking and believing this!

GYLLING. I don't know what there is to hinder a man when he has once disavowed the moral commandments.

ROSMER. Have I done that?

GYLLING. To my mind faith and morality cannot be separated. And I know no other morality than our Christian one.

ROSMER. And I know no Christian morality: I know no other morality than that I have within me.
GYLLING. Private, human morality is but a feeble protection.

ROSMER. Oh, this boundless fanaticism that has possessed you.

GYLLING. Yes, you may call me a fanatic in that respect. To my last hour I shall hate and fight against these fatal tendencies of the age. They have brought strife and disruption into my home—and into hundreds of others as well. They have embittered my life’s work—

ROSMER. Political controversies, yes. But I do not mix myself up with those.

GYLLING. One thing cannot be separated from the other. And that apostacy should seize you too. Should separate us so irrevocably from each other. But I see it, I see it;—this case of yours—it is the work of a cunning and remorseless woman.

ROSMER. Not another word about her.

GYLLING. Was it not she who from the very first brought you into the path you are now following?

ROSMER. Yes; to her praise be it said. And since then we have faithfully worked together like two comrades.

GYLLING. You are like a child in her hands; and you don’t see it.

ROSMER. I am happy and free; I can live my own life.

GYLLING (putting on his coat). Then see what that life will be like when you are cut off from all those who have hitherto been near to you.

ROSMER. They cannot all be such fanatics as you.

GYLLING. You will soon find out about that.

(He gives a curt nod and goes out through the hall.)

(Miss Dankert enters shortly afterwards from the right.)
Miss Dankert. I saw him go out.
Rosmer. He will never come back.
Miss Dankert. You have told him everything.
Rosmer. Yes.
Miss Dankert. And then?
Rosmer. Complete rupture. Irremediable—
Rosmer. Our old relations can never be restored.
Miss Dankert. Well, believe me; that is best for you.
Rosmer. Yes, I know you think so. But such old habits are deeply rooted in me.
Miss Dankert. Much too deeply. You would never have been free if that circle had been allowed to go on exercising its influence on you.
Rosmer. I am bound to tell you this. Now that I have openly withdrawn from them, they will cease to regard our relationship as what it is.
Miss Dankert. Our relationship—!
Rosmer. Purity of life is not to be looked for in apostates, he said.
Miss Dankert. Oh, these madmen!
Rosmer. What is to be done?
Miss Dankert. Do you wish me to leave here?
Rosmer. Do I wish that!
Miss Dankert. Well, it is not necessary on my account.
Rosmer. No, it's not, is it, Rebecca? Your spirit is so proud and free. Your own consciousness is sufficient to you.
Miss Dankert. Yes, it is. Why should we flinch before the low and vile thoughts of some people? Why should we make ourselves unhappy? For we should be so—

Rosmer. Yes, yes.

Miss Dankert. No, we shall keep together in good comradeship and help and support one another as well as we can. But look there——!

Rosmer (with a cry).

(Rector Gylling has opened the door at the back.)

Gylling. Well, I don't know whether I may come in again.

Rosmer. Pray come in.

(The Rector comes in, keeping his overcoat on.)

Gylling. What is past cannot be altered; but now listen, Rosmer——

Rosmer. I'm listening, I'm listening——

Gylling. Is there any necessity for your sad apostasy to be proclaimed over the whole country?

Rosmer. I must and will get out of the false position I have been in so long. My book is ready.

Gylling. And you don't consider what consequences this will have for you? The whole conservative press will attack you and your book——

Miss Dankert. But how can you tell that, Rector? You don't know the book, do you?

Gylling. H'm, I suppose you will accuse us of fanaticism and persecution of those who differ from us. But this cannot be avoided in a period of agitation like ours. It is an absolute duty for every good citizen who has the power to do it, to root up all the dangerous weeds, whenever and wherever they may show themselves.

Rosmer. Well, well; then I know what to be prepared for.

Gylling. No, you don't know. It will be something far more violent than you think. Therefore I beg you, Rosmer—hold your hand; do so—you, the quiet, retiring enquirer;—this is not suited to you.

Rosmer. But can you ask me to be so cowardly!

Gylling. It is your duty to your environment. Remember the prominent position your family has occupied for so long. The respect you yourself enjoy. You will make many unstable people irresolute, vacillating, unhappy.

Rosmer. Do you think so?

Gylling. You surely can’t have a doubt of it yourself?

Rosmer. But I cannot stand looking on for ever. All around, in every department of life, a luxuriant germination is going on. And it is time that I too began to live. I must and will be happy in this world.

Gylling. I can guess where this hunt for happiness is derived from. Don’t you seek it too, Miss Dankert?

Miss Dankert. It is in the air. It is one of the greatest things about the new age that we dare openly proclaim happiness as our end in life.

Gylling. You do so?

Miss Dankert. Certainly I do.

Gylling. Is it principles of this kind that are preached in your new book?

Rosmer. Yes, if it is rightly understood.

Gylling. Poor man—you, with your conscience burdened with guilt—you think you can find happiness by those paths.

Miss Dankert. Burdened with guilt! What does that mean?

Rosmer. I feel that I am free and pure.

Gylling. You believe that perhaps. But you are mistaken. You have betrayed yourself. And unhappy
Beata gave you her life as a sacrifice. You are founding your happiness on water. Remember the mill-pond. (He goes.)

Rosmer. But this is not true, Rebecca.
Miss Dankert. I know that, of course.
Rosmer. But nevertheless—well, it must be said some time or other. Did I really love you even then?
Miss Dankert. Love! You, Rosmer!
Rosmer. Will you go away now?
Miss Dankert (giving him her hand). No, my friend, now I stay with you.
Rosmer. Thanks, Rebecca!

_______________

THIRD ACT

Johannes Rosmer's study. A door at the back; also on the left. Bookcases and shelves on the walls. A window on the right, and before it a writing-table, covered with books and papers.—Old-fashioned furniture; a table, with table-cloth, in the middle of the room.

(Johannes Rosmer is sitting in a high-backed chair at the writing-table, reading a pamphlet, the pages of which he cuts as he reads. There is a knock at the door on the left.)

Rosmer (without turning.) Pray come in.

(Miss West enters in a morning gown, with a newspaper in her hand.)

Miss West. Good morning.
Rosmer (reading). Good morning, dear. Is there anything you want?
Miss West. Here is to-day's Country News.
Rosmer (turning). Is there anything in it?
Miss West. Yes, there is. (Gives him the paper.)
Rosmer. Already. (Reads.) Now let us see.
Miss West (behind him, leaning over the back of the chair, also reads). They wanted to be the first——
Rosmer. —to weaken the effect, yes.—"We cannot sufficiently express our contempt"—Contempt?—"for renegades who have lain in hiding while the situation remained uncertain"—Gylling never wrote that——
Miss West. Who knows?
Rosmer. No, no. "Renegades . . . but who march over with colours flying as soon as victory seems assured." And they can write such things, that they themselves don’t believe. "When confused visionaries with no will of their own fall into the hands of calculating intriguers"—I won’t read any more. (Rises.) At any rate not now.
Miss West. Will you answer it?
Rosmer. Oh, what is the use? And my name is not actually mentioned either.
Miss West. But it will soon get about that it is aimed at you. The calculating intruder is of course myself.
Rosmer (walking nervously about). These days of denunciation—ah, it is indeed a great mission to make an end of them.

(Madam Helset opens the door on the left.)
Miss West. What is it, Madam Helset?
Madam Helset. It’s that Mortensgård, who’d like to speak to Mr. Rosmer.
Rosmer. Mortensgård? What can he want?
Miss West. You’ll let him come in, won’t you?
Rosmer (to Madam Helset). Yes, let him come in.

(Madam Helset opens the door to Mortensgård, closes it behind him and goes.)
Mortensgård. It is a long time since I stood before you, Pastor.

Rosmer. Yes, it is years ago. I have often asked myself whether I did not act too harshly at that time.

Mortensgård. Do you say that, Pastor?

Rosmer. Well, you have found another position, with which I am sure you feel more satisfied.

Mortensgård. Oh yes, in a way.

Rosmer. Have you anything in particular to say to me?

Mortensgård. First I think I ought to thank you for the card Mr. Hekfeldt brought me.

Rosmer. You may thank Miss West for that.

Mortensgård. Of course. Miss West also.

Miss West. Can you make use of him?

Mortensgård. Unhappily, I think it is too late.

Rosmer. Do you think so?

Mortensgård. He is not abreast of the times; stands so strangely outside what is going on. Looks upon things with eyes that may have been radical enough twenty years ago——

Rosmer. Yes, they were.—Tell me, have you read to-day’s County News?

Mortensgård. No, not yet.

Rosmer. Don’t say that, Mr. Mortensgård. I am sure you have read it.

Mortensgård. Well yes, I’ve glanced at it—here and there.

Rosmer. Then you must have seen the leading article?

Mortensgård. Yes, it struck me as rather strange.

Rosmer. Did you understand whom it was meant for?

Mortensgård. I don’t think I could believe it myself.
Rosmer. No, no.

Mortensgård. So there is something wrong between you and the other gentlemen?

Rosmer. I have left that circle. I am going to take up a position of my own.

Mortensgård. So you have left them, Pastor? Really? I didn’t expect that.

Miss West. It is a step that has been long prepared, Mr. Mortensgård.

Mortensgård. Is it so? Must say, I didn’t expect it. Are you going to reply to this attack, Pastor?

Rosmer. I hardly think so. I so cordially dislike these squabbles between man and man.

Mortensgård. But if it should be necessary—for perhaps there may be more to come——

Rosmer. Do you think so?

Mortensgård. It is their usual way. And if you should find it difficult to get anything into the County News, my paper is open to you. It would be a great honour to us.

Rosmer. Thanks. I may perhaps avail myself of your offer. Not in this connection. But there are other subjects that I wish to deal with.

Mortensgård. Whatever you like, Pastor. The more the better. It will be an incalculable gain to the cause of progress throughout the country, if a man like you, a Churchman, takes our side.

Rosmer. But look here; I must first tell you that I am no longer a Churchman.

Mortensgård. Of course, I know that; but your having resigned your living makes no difference.

Rosmer. I don’t mean that either. But the fact is that I no longer hold the faith of the Church.

Mortensgård. You don’t hold—? You:
Rosmer. No. I have entirely broken with everything of that sort.

Mortensgård. I should advise you to keep that to yourself, Mr. Rosmer.

Rosmer. You give me that advice?

Miss West. You are at no pains to conceal your own opinions.

Mortensgård. It would be of little use. A man who has once been so incautious—so unfortunate, as I—

Rosmer. Then do you not put the truth before everything?

Mortensgård. I put my ends before everything. I have continued to be a teacher of the people; only in another way. What brought me to my fall was want and lack of knowledge. Now I wish to help as many as possible on the way to enlightenment and better circumstances. And this can only be done on the path of freedom.

Rosmer. Yes, there we are quite agreed.

Mortensgård. In this way I am redeeming my offence against society. For myself I have no hope of any gain. For I am civilly dead, as you know.

III

FROM THE FIRST ACT

Madam Helset. Yes, he said his name was Uldric.

Rosmer. Ulric?

Madam Helset. Yes, and then there was something more. I thought it sounded like Hetmand or something of the sort.
Rosmer (to Gylling). That unfortunate Ulric Hetman!

Gylling. That black sheep Ulric Hetman? Then he is still alive.

Rosmer. Ask him to come in, Madam Helset.

Madam Helset. Oh, very well. (She goes out.)

Gylling. Are you really going to let such a man into your house?

Rosmer. I knew him a little in the days of his prosperity.

Gylling. When last I heard of him, he was in the House of Correction.

(Madam Helset opens the door on the right for Ulric Hetman, and then withdraws, shutting the door behind him. He is a handsome man, with hair and beard streaked with grey. He is dressed like a common tramp; no overcoat; worn-out shoes; no shirt visible. He wears an old pair of black gloves, and carries a soft, greasy bowler hat under his arm and a walking-stick in his hand.)

Ulric Hetman (hesitates at first, then goes quickly up to the Rector, and holds out his hand). How are you, Rosmer!

Gylling. Excuse me—

Hetman. Didn't expect to see me again in these parts, did you?

Gylling. Excuse me— (Pointing.) There—

Hetman (turns). Right. There he is. How are you, Rosmer? I could not pass by Rosmersholm without paying you a visit.

Rosmer. Travellers are always welcome with us.

Hetman. I had no card on me. But I hope the elderly lady I met outside has duly announced me.
Well, that's all right. (Bows to Rebecca.) Ah, Mrs. Rosmer, of course.

Rosmer. Miss West.

Hetman. A near relation, no doubt. And there—(Pointing to the Rector.) A brother of the cloth, I see.

Rosmer. Rector Gylling.

Hetman. Gylling. Gylling? Wait a bit; weren't you a student of philology?

Gylling. Of course I was.

Hetman. Why Donnerwetter, then I knew you!

Gylling. Pardon me——

Hetman. Weren't you——

Gylling. Pardon me——

Hetman. —one of those champions of morality that got me expelled from the Students' Club?

Hetman. Well, well; nach Belieben, Herr Rector. It's all one to me. Ulric Hetman remains the man he is for all that.

Rebecca. You are on your way into town, Mr. Hetman?

Hetman. Yes, gracious lady, I am. I should be so unspeakably reluctant to lose anything of the respect of a young, pretty, amiable and charming lady. But unhappily—I am forced to confess it—as yet I do not know this part of the country.

Gylling. Indeed. But you have roamed a good deal about other parts of the country, from what I have heard.

Hetman (gruffly). That is so, Herr Professor. I have undertaken fairly extensive journeys. (To Rosmer.) But now you shall hear my plan. I have decided to give a series of lectures throughout the country. And I am thinking of making this my starting-point, although—I suppose my name is not very familiar in these parts?

Rosmer. No, I don’t think so.

Hetman. Oh no, it wasn’t to be expected of the inhabitants of such a hole-and-corner place. (To Gylling.) But tell me, Herr Inspector—unter uns—have you a tolerably decent, reputable, and commodious Public Hall in your honoured city?

Gylling. The hall of the Workmen’s Society is the largest.

Hetman. And has the Herr Docent any official influence in this doubtless most beneficent Society?

Gylling. I have nothing to do with it.

Rebecca (to Hetman). You should apply to Peter Mortensgård.

Hetman. Pardon, madame—what sort of an idiot is he?

Rosmer. What makes you take him for an idiot?

Hetman. Can’t one tell at once by the name that he is a plebeian?

Gylling. I didn’t expect that answer.

Hetman. Perhaps the Herr Professor thought that Ulric Hetman was ready to demean himself with anyone you please? But one has to conquer one’s antipathy when one stands at a turning-point in one’s career. I will approach this individual, will open negotiations—

Rosmer. Are you really and seriously standing at a turning-point?

Hetman. Seriously, Herr Pastor? Stand he where he may, Ulric Hetman always stands seriously. Now it is decided. One of these days I shall emerge from my somewhat unnoticed and unappreciated existence. The series of lectures that I am about to give—that is to unravel my life’s greatest and newest idea.
Rebecca. What idea is that, Mr. Hetman? Oh, tell us that.

Hetman. Well, here, in a confidential circle of more or less close acquaintances, there is nothing to conceal. I will open my long-contemplated war against all the landowners in the country.

Gylling. Against the landowners? Against the peasantry then?

Hetman. Certainly, Herr Professor. Are you with me?

Gylling. I am with you in so far as I am already at enmity with the Radical majority——

Hetman. Bosh about majorities and such things! It's the peasants in general that I'm at war with. Both the great and the small. Both the Radicals and the idiots——

Gylling. But allow me, Mr. ———; you can't do things without any party point of view whatever——

Hetman. Now listen to me. And follow me carefully; then perhaps you will be able to understand. Suppose now I associate myself with three or four capitalists in town. We establish a large factory for the preparation of some product or other, which has not yet been discovered.

Gylling. But where does this take us?

Hetman. Patience, Herr Professor. In the preparation of this product we require all the oxygen that is contained in or brought to the atmosphere of the county—or we require all the carbon in the air. We—I and the other two or three capitalists might be using it to make diamonds of. But in both cases the air of the whole county would be unserviceable for men and other animals and for everything organic. Everyone of them would have to buy his portion of vital air from us——perhaps at an exorbitant price. If not—heraus! What do you say to that?

GYLLING. I don't think the authorities here would permit such an industry.

HETMAN. I don't think so either, honoured Sir. Nor do I think they would permit it if our little syndicate proposed to use the river or the fiord in such a way that no fish could swim there and no craft float. (Coming nearer.) Or perhaps you don't agree with me there?

GYLLING (drawing back a step). Well, well, well! Of course I agree.

HETMAN. I have a faint suspicion that you think I'm suffering from some form of mental disease or other. But that is an error for the moment. I have only been trying to emphasise the fact that we all agree that the air and water of our planet are common property to everybody. But when the solid earth is in question—the ground under our feet, that no one can do without, well, das ist was Anderes! Nobody breathes a word against the solid earth of the globe being in the hands of a comparatively small band of robbers, who have made use of it for centuries, who are making use of it to-day, and who propose to make use of it for all futurity. You see, honoured Sirs—and you, fair lady, that is the obscure matter of vital importance that I wish to throw light upon.

GYLLING. Doubt if it will be a profitable undertaking.

HETMAN. What do I care for profit? It is the idea—my greatest and my newest idea, that matters to me. It struck me in a flash that mankind's sense of justice is suffering from partial insanity. That is the heart of the matter. This idea has come to me from above—or from below—or from the obscure inscrutable powers. It has come to me through an inspiration, I say. Therefore it is mine alone. And now I am going into the town to present it to mankind.

Rebecca. But excuse me, Mr. Hetman—that idea is not altogether new.

Hetman (with a start). What do you say—fair lady? My idea is not new!

Rebecca. I am afraid, not altogether. We were just reading a book this winter that deals with something similar.

Hetman (to Rosmer). Does this lady speak the truth?

Rosmer. Yes, of course.

Hetman. And in this book there is that about the land and—?

Rosmer. That is what the book turns upon.

Hetman (pale and tottering). The meeting will—kindly—allow me to—to sit down.

(He sinks into an easy chair and sits leaning forward, with his hands on his knees.)

Rebecca. Can’t I fetch you something? What can I—?

Hetman (gazing before him). Too late. I came too late. This time again. Always too late.

Gylling. That doesn’t really make any difference. I’m sure it will be quite new to most of the people about here.

Hetman (with a look of misery). How can it help me or cheer me if the whole world thought it was new, now that I know myself that it is not?

Rebecca. Oh, how I wish I had said nothing.

Hetman (rising). Fair lady—it was a hard blow that your love of truth dealt me. I had treasured that idea, brooded over it with jealous affection, felt it grow, thought that I should never have the heart to let it go from me. And now, when I let it go, I am too late. This time again. Well, well, well! No tears of sympathy, ladies and gentlemen. I submit to no pity. deserve none either. Perhaps there is a just Nemesis in this. Perhaps there has been something or other in my way of living——

ROSMER. Yes, don't you think so yourself?

HETMAN. I will put on a new man. And then I will get up one or two evening entertainments. A little declamation and singing and so on. (To GYLLING.) Is there such a thing as a Temperance Society in the town? A Total Abstinence Society? I need scarcely ask.

GYLLING. Yes. I am the president.

HETMAN. No, really? I shouldn't have thought it. Well, it is by no means impossible that I may come to you and enrol myself as a member for a week.

GYLLING. Excuse me, but we don't receive members by the week.

HETMAN. À la bonne heure. Ulric Hetman has never forced himself into that sort of Society. (Turns.) But I must not prolong my visit in this pleasant house. I must be on my way to the town and select a suitable lodging. I presume there is a decent hotel in the place.

REBECCA. Mayn't I offer you anything before you go?

HETMAN. Of what sort, gracious lady?

REBECCA. A cup of tea, or——

HETMAN. I thank my bountiful hostess many times—but I am always loath to trespass on private hospitality. (Bows.) Good-bye, gentlefolks all! (Goes toward the door, but turns again.) Oh, by the way—— Pastor Rosmer, for the sake of our ancient friendship, will you do your old friend a small service?

ROSMER. Yes, gladly. What is it?
Hetman. You see, I am travelling on foot at present. My wardrobe is being sent after me. Could you lend me a starched shirt—with cuffs—for a day or two?

Rosmer. Certainly. Is there nothing else?

Hetman. Well, do you know—perhaps you could spare me an oldish, well-worn overcoat.

Rosmer. Oh yes; certainly I can.

Hetman. And perhaps a pair of winter boots. I have been so imprudent as only to bring these light spring shoes with me.

Rosmer. That we can manage too. As soon as you let us know your address, we will send the things in.

Hetman. Not on any account. So much trouble. I will take the bagatelles with me.

Rosmer. As you please. Come here with me then.

Rebecca. Let me go. Madam Helset and I will see to it. (Goes out to the right.)

Rosmer. Is there nothing else I can do for you?

Hetman. Upon my word, I know of nothing more. Well, yes, damn it—now that I think of it—do you happen to have eight crowns in your pocket?

Rosmer. Let me see. (Opens his purse.) Here is a ten-crown note.

Hetman. Well, well, never mind! I can take it. I can always get it changed in the town. Thanks in the meantime. Remember it was ten crowns you lent me. Farewell, respected Sirs.

(Goes out to the right. Rosmer takes leave of him, and shuts the door behind him.)

Gylling. Merciful Heaven—so that is the once brilliant Ulric Hetman!

Rosmer. Step by step he must have gone down.

Gylling. How much people thought of him! The lion of the capital,—in spite of all the excesses he was guilty of. But then came his notorious book. And that broke him.

Rosmer. Do you think he is past saving?

Gylling. He?

Rosmer. Would it not be possible to raise him again?

Gylling. Oh, my dear fellow, how could that be managed?

Rosmer. I mean by going to work in a forbearing—kindly way; showing confidence in him; relying on his good intentions. You could see that he showed a kind of self-knowledge.

Gylling. Do you rely on the moods of such a man?

Rosmer. I would gladly do so.

Gylling. Ah, Rosmer, you always had hope, when nobody else had.

MADAM HELSET. I suppose I can take away the supper things, Miss?

Rebecca. Yes, please.

MADAM HELSET (clearing away). It was very early for the Rector to go this evening.

Rebecca. I think we shall see him again to-morrow.

MADAM HELSET. That you won’t. There’s bad weather brewing.

Rebecca (putting her sewing in its basket). That’s good. Then perhaps I too shall have a chance of seeing white horses at Rosmersholm.

FROM THE SECOND ACT

Mortensgard. That I don’t doubt. But it is too late now. I am branded once for all—branded for life.

Rosmer. I did not think you still took that affair so much to heart.
Mortensgård. Because I am now fairly well off, do you mean? Much better off than if I had kept my position at the school? Yes, that is true. I am. But then think of my peculiar situation. A new age has come over the country. I too might have risen to anything—like most of the others. But—all doors were closed to me. The men I have fought for, and who owe it to me that they have risen to power and honour—they will have nothing to do with me. They dare not for their own sake.

Rosmer. Do you think then that cowardice extends even to the most powerful?

Mortensgård. It is not cowardice, Pastor Rosmer. These people can't set aside hypocrisy. If they break with hypocrisy, their fall is at hand. Oh yes, you may perhaps come to feel the smart of it yourself now, Pastor.

Rosmer. Madam Helset brought it to me late one evening.

Mortensgård. If you had inquired of Madam Helset, you would have learnt that my poor unhappy wife was not fully accountable for her actions.

Rosmer. I did make inquiries, Pastor Rosmer. But I must say that was not the impression I received.

Rosmer. Was it not? Then what did Madam Helset think?

Mortensgård. Well, she too was strange. I could not exactly get at what she thought.

Rosmer. Oh? But what is your precise reason for telling me now about this incomprehensible old letter?

Mortensgård. To impress on you the necessity for extreme prudence, Pastor Rosmer.
Rosmer. In my life, do you mean?
Mortensgård. Yes.
Rosmer. Then you think that I must have something to conceal?
Mortensgård. Putting everything together, I don't see what other conclusion I can come to.
Rosmer. Then you believe me capable of leading an immoral life.
Mortensgård. It seems to me that such an expression sounds strange from you now, Pastor. I should have thought an emancipated man would have left behind him all these old morbid considerations and scruples.
Rosmer. Have you done so yourself?
Mortensgård. Yes, of course. I take it that, since I am in this world, I have the right to live my life after my own mind and inclination. But of course, for one's own sake one must avoid falling out with the hypocrites and with all the victims of stupefaction one mixes with.
Rosmer. You and I will never agree on that point, Mr. Mortensgård.
Mortensgård. H'm. But in any case be cautious, Pastor. If anything should come out that conflicts with current prejudices, you may be sure the whole liberal movement will get the blame for it. Good-bye, Pastor Rosmer.

FROM THE THIRD ACT

Rebecca. When I came down here from Finmark with Dr. West—I was then a year or two over twenty—— Rosmer. Oh yes. I know that.
Rebecca. Rosmer—I was no longer what people call an—an innocent woman.
Rosmer. What do you say! Impossible! You are out of your senses.

Gylling. Perhaps I had better go.

Rebecca. No, please stay where you are, my dear Rector. Yes, Rosmer—that is the truth about me from the beginning.

Rosmer. Oh, you, you! How could you—! Who was he?

Rebecca. One who had complete power over me. He had taught me everything. All the desultory information I had about life at that time.

Rosmer. But for all that! You—oh, that you could surrender yourself—!

Rebecca. I thought then that it was something that concerned no one but myself. If it were only hidden.— And hidden it was.

Gylling. So that is the state of the case.

Rebecca (looking at him). After such an experience it is not to be wondered at that a woman should hold out. Hold out in spite of pretty harsh usage. Hold out to the last.

Gylling. Now I understand it—perhaps.

Rosmer. And that is what you were when you came to Rosmersholm. What did you want here?

Rebecca. I wanted to take my share in the life of the new era that was dawning, with its new ideas. You had told me about Ulric Hetman and the revolution he had nearly—. I wanted you to be to me what he had once been to you. And then, I thought, we should march onward in freedom, side by side. Ever onward. Ever farther to the front.—But between you and perfect emancipation there rose the great, insurmountable barrier.

Rosmer. What barrier do you mean?

Rebecca. I mean this: you could grow only in the sunshine—and here you were sickening in the gloom of such a marriage.

Rosmer. But we never said a word about my marriage. Never a word. I am certain of that.

Rebecca. We did not. Nor was it necessary. For I could see to the bottom of your heart. And then I went to work.

Rosmer. Went to work? In what way?

Gylling. Do you mean that——

Rebecca. Yes, Rosmer—(Rises.) Sit still. You too, Rector Gylling. But now it must out. It was not you, Rosmer. You are innocent. It was I—that lured Beata out into the paths of delusion—— Rosmer (springs up). Rebecca!

Gylling (rises from the sofa). The paths of delusion!

Rebecca. The paths that led to the mill-pond. Now you know it, both of you.

Rosmer. But I don’t understand—. I only hear—and don’t understand a word.

Gylling. Oh yes. I am beginning to understand.

Rosmer. But what can you possibly have said? There was nothing—absolutely nothing to tell.

Rebecca. There was this: we were talking together, reading together, working our way to emancipation together.

Rosmer. So she knew that.

Rebecca. She came to know that you were working yourself free from all the old, obsolete prejudices.

Rosmer. And then? What more? I must know all now.

Rebecca. Sometime after, I begged and implored her to let me go away from Rosmersholm.

Rosmer. Why did you want to go?

Rebecca. I did not want to go; I wanted to stay where I was. But I told her that it would be best for us all that I should go away in time. I gave her to understand that if I stayed any longer, I could not—I could not tell—what might happen.

Rosmer. Then this is what you did.

Rebecca. Yes, Rosmer.

Rosmer. This is what you call "going to work."

Rebecca. I called it so, yes.

Rosmer. Have you confessed all now?

Rebecca. Yes.

Gylling. Not all.

Rebecca. What more should there be?

Gylling. Did you not at last give Beata to understand that it was necessary—not only that it would be wisest, but that it was necessary—both for your own sake and Rosmer's, that you should go away as soon as possible?

Rebecca. Perhaps I did say something of the sort.

Rosmer (sinks into a chair and covers his face with his hands). And this tissue of lies and deceit she believed in! Believed in it as firmly, as immovably, as in a gospel. (Looks up at Rebecca.) And she never turned to me. Never said one word to me. Why did she not do so?

Rebecca. I dissuaded her so earnestly from it.

Rosmer. Yes, yes, in everything she bowed before your will. And then she quietly went out of life. Effaced herself. Went into—the mill-pond. (Springs up.) How could you—how could you play this ghastly game?

Rebecca. I had to choose between your life and hers, Rosmer. Either you would have been ruined or——

Rosmer. —or Beata, yes.

Gylling. This is frightful! Frightful.

Rebecca. You think then that I acted in full, cool self-possession! Just as I stand here telling it all! There are two sorts of will in us, I believe. I wanted Beata away. But I never really believed that it would come to pass. As I advanced, at each step I seemed to hear something within me cry out: No farther! Not a step farther!—And yet I could not stop. I had to venture the least little bit farther. Only one hair's breadth more. And then one more—and always one more. Have you never felt what it is like to be giddy? One dare not take another step. Nor look down. And yet one does it. One can't help it. One almost thinks it's a delightful sensation—. That is the way such things come about.

Rosmer. Now I know how it all happened. But there is one thing I do not understand. How were you able to bring yourself to disclose your whole heartless conduct?

Rebecca. It had to be done for your sake. I did not wish you to feel oppressed and burdened by self-reproach.

FROM THE FOURTH ACT

Madam Helset. But the Pastor, he's not home yet?
Rebecca. If I don't see him, you can tell him that I will write to him—a long letter. Tell him that.
Madam Helset. But dear Miss West—that'll never do at all——
Rebecca. What, Madam Helset?
Madam Helset. That you should go away from Rosmersholm without saying good-bye to the Pastor.
Rebecca. Well, as it happens, perhaps it is best so.

Rebecca. Could you have believed such a thing of Pastor Rosmer and me?
Madam Helset. Believed——?
Rebecca. Yes, don’t you think it came like a thunder-clap?

Madam Helset. Oh, I won’t quite say that either. We’re all of us human, Miss West.

Rebecca. That’s very true, Madam Helset. We are all of us human.

Madam Helset (looking towards the hall). Oh Lord—if that’s not him coming!

Rebecca. After all. (Resolutely) Well, well; so be it.

Rebecca (pointing out through the hall). Hush. Do you see who is coming?

Rosmer (looks out). It is Ulric Hetman.

(Ulric Hetman comes in through the hall.)

Ulric Hetman (stops in the doorway). Rosmer—my boy, my boy—what is this I hear about you?

Rosmer. Have you come to stay with us?

Hetman. No. I have come to say my last farewell.

Rebecca. Are you leaving the town again already?

Hetman. Yes. I’m shaking the dust off my feet. A man can’t live up in these parts. It’s even worse than down below.

Rosmer. I had thought that more light and freedom was coming.

Hetman. So I hear.

Rosmer (with a melancholy smile). Your old pupil has not been false to you, you see.

Hetman. Beware of what you do. Don’t follow my example. All my doctrine is false. Has been false from its very beginning. That I have now found out.

Rosmer. Do you no longer adhere to all the great ideals?
Hetman. It's all rubbish, my boy. Empty dreams. Nothing but mocking shadows that drag us down to destruction. Humanity is past help.

Rosmer. Do you believe that!

Hetman. Past help for all eternity.

Rosmer. But why? Why should we believe that?

Hetman. Because a mistake was made at the very Creation.

Rosmer. And that mistake was——?

Hetman (shrugs his shoulders). Who can say!

Rosmer. Well, but how can you tell that the mistake was there?

Hetman (with a mysterious smile). The Master deceived himself, my boy.

Rosmer. Deceived himself? The Master? How?

Hetman. Are you a judge of character?

Rosmer. I think myself I am, but——

Hetman. Well, in any case you used once to mix with artists—with various poets, I remember.

Rosmer. Yes.

Hetman. Didn't you notice a peculiar trait about those fellows?

Rosmer. What trait do you mean?

Hetman. When one of these creative gentlemen had finished a work, which had turned out absolutely as it should be, he examined it and let it go. Quite calmly. There was nothing to be said about the work. It was as it should be. Didn't you notice that, my boy?

Rosmer. Yes. And it seems to me perfectly reasonable.

Hetman. I think so too. But once in a while the master might chance upon a failure. Either he was not in the right mood, or in too much of a hurry, or whatever it might be. What does my gentleman do then? Why, he puts his head on one side. Looks at his work with the air of a connoisseur. Examines it from every side. And then says he: Upon my soul—this is good. Damned good.

Rosmer. Insecurity, you mean?

Hetman (nods slowly). The master feels that there is a flaw in the work. And so he takes a firm stand. Insecurity of conscience, my boy. And that is what we have all inherited. That is why humanity is incurable. Past help:

Rebecca. Then is life worth living?

Hetman. Oh yes. Only avoid doing silly things. No quackery. Let life swing right or left—just as it chances.

Rebecca. But one's self? Each individual?

Hetman. Eat, drink and be merry, my fair young lady. And you must take existence in the same way, Rosmer. The Master forgot to give us wings. Both inner and outer ones. So let us crawl on the earth as long as we can. There is nothing else to be done.

Rosmer. Well, in any case there is the alternative of making an end of it all.

Rebecca (involuntarily). Yes, happily.

Hetman. But surely you two can get along——

Rosmer. Do you think so? Then you still believe in love?

Hetman. My son, I believe in happiness—the happiness of living under the same roof with so attractive a companion.

Rosmer. Unhappily the attractive companion is leaving me.

Hetman. Leaving you?

Rosmer. To-night.

Rebecca. In half an hour.

Hetman. You don't seem to understand how to keep your women. Your first one left you too.
Rosmer. Yes, she did.
Hetman. Brave woman. She went of her own accord—to smooth your path.
Rosmer. Who told you that?
Hetman. That blackguard Mortensgård let out something about it in a letter.
Rosmer. I see.
Hetman. Respect and honour her. For that woman must have had a kind of wings, it seems to me.
Rebecca. Wings? Why wings?
Hetman. Did she not raise herself so high that she could die for her love?
Rosmer. Ah yes—to be able to die for something.
Hetman. I would have taken my oath there wasn’t a single living soul that could do it.
Rosmer. To seek death—and so bear witness of one’s love.
Rebecca. I shall not go to-night.
Rosmer (uneasily). Yes, go! Go!
Hetman. Stay, fair lady. To you there is no danger abroad. He will not let you be lured beneath the waters. Farewell.
Rosmer. Are you going now? In the dark night?
Hetman. The dark night is best. Peace be with you.
(He goes out through the hall. There is a short silence in the room. Rebecca is standing by the window. Rosmer walks up and down. Then he sits down in a chair by the table.)

Madam Helset. Miss West, the carriage is— (Looks round.) Not here? Out at this time of night? Well—I must say—. If'm— (Goes out into the hall, looks round, and comes in again.) Not on the garden seat. Ah, well, well. (Goes to the window and looks out.) Good God!—what's that? The White Horse! Oh no, oh no!—There it is. On the bridge. To-night he dares— (Shrieks aloud.) In the mill-race! Both of them in the mill-race! (Runs to the door on the right and cries:) Help—help! (Stops, glances towards the window, and says in a lower tone.) Oh no. This is past all help or remedy. It was the dead wife that took them.
"THE LADY FROM THE SEA"
A PLAY IN FIVE ACTS

By
HENRIK IBSEN

1888
1st act.—The little calling-place for tourist steamers. They only call when there are passengers to be landed or taken on board. Shut in by high, steep mountains. The free, open sea is not visible. Only the winding fiord.

Bathing hotel. Sanatorium higher up. When the play opens the last steamer of the year is going north. The boats always pass at midnight. Slowly, noiselessly they glide into the bay and out again.

The persons of the play fall into three groups. First, there are peculiar figures among the inhabitants of the place. The lawyer, married for the second time to the woman from the free, open sea. Has two young grown-up daughters of his first marriage. Refined, well-bred, bitter. Past stained by a rash affair. Therefore future career barred. The starving sign-painter with his artist's dreams, made happy by imagination. The old married clerk. In his youth he wrote a play, which was performed once. Is constantly polishing it, and lives in the illusion of getting it published and making a success. Takes, however, no step in this direction. Reckons himself nevertheless among literary men. Wife and children believe blindly in "the piece." (Perhaps he is a private teacher, not a clerk?)—Fresvik the tailor, the radical man-midwife, who shows his "emancipation" in ridiculous escapades—intrigues with other men's wives; talks about divorce and the like.

The second group is formed by the summer visitors and the invalids at the Sanatorium. Among these is the young invalid sculptor, who has to recruit his strength to get through the coming winter. For next summer he is promised a grant of money and a commission and other support, and then he will be able to go to Italy. Dreads the possibility of having to die without having seen the south and without having achieved anything good in his art.—His "patron" is staying at the bathing hotel. Assumes guardianship over the invalid. Is a man of principle. No aid, no support this year. The grant to be down in black and white, "then we will see what we can do next year." His wife, stupid, arrogant and tactless. Hurts the invalid, sometimes by design, sometimes unwittingly.—Many secondary persons.

The third group consists of passing tourists, who enter episodically into the action.

Life is apparently bright, easy and lively up there beneath the shadow of the mountains and in the monotony of seclusion. Then the idea is thrown out that this kind of life is a life of shadows. No energy; no struggle for liberation. Only longings and desires. Thus they live through the short, light summer. And afterwards—into the darkness. Then awakes the longing for the life of the great world outside. But what is to be gained by that? With surroundings, with spiritual development, demands and longings and desires increase. He or she, who stands on the height, yearns for the secrets of the future and a share in the life of the future and communication with distant worlds. Everywhere there is limitation. The result is melancholy like a hushed, wailing song over the whole of human existence and over the deeds of men. A light summer day with the great darkness to follow—that is all.——

Has the line of human development gone astray? Why have we come to belong to the dry land? Why not to the air? Why not to the sea? The longing to possess wings. The strange dreams that one can fly and that one does fly without being surprised at it—how is all this to be interpreted?

We ought to possess ourselves of the sea. Build our cities floating upon the sea. Move them southward or northward according to the season. Learn to harness the storms and the weather. Some such felicity will come. And we—shall not be in it! Shall not live to see it!

The sea's power of attraction. Longing for the sea. Human beings akin to the sea. Bound by the sea. Dependent on the sea. Compelled to return to it. A fish species forms a primitive link in the chain of evolution. Are rudiments thereof still present in the human mind? In the minds of certain individuals?

Pictures of the teeming life of the sea and of that which is "lost for ever."

The sea possesses a power over one's moods that has the effect of a will. The sea can hypnotise. Nature in general can do so. The great mystery is the dependence of the human will on that which is "will-less."

She came from out by the sea, where her father's parsonage lay. Grew up out there—by the free, open sea. Became engaged to the wayward young mate—a dismissed naval cadet—whose ship was laid up for repairs for the winter in an outlying harbour. Had to break off the engagement by her father's wish. Partly also of her own accord. Could not forgive what came to light about his past. So prejudiced was she at that time through her education in her father's home. Nor has she ever since quite left her prejudices behind, though she knows better. Stands on the border-line, hesitating and doubting.

The mystery in her marriage—which she scarcely dares acknowledge to herself; scarcely dares to think of: Imagination's power of attraction towards the former one. Towards him who is gone.

In effect—in her unconscious view—it is he that she is living her married life with.

But—on the other hand—are her husband and step-children living wholly with her? Have not these three, as it were, a whole world of memories among themselves? They keep festivals, whose meaning she can only guess. Conversations come to a standstill—are broken off, when she comes in. She did not know her predecessor, and from delicacy the subject is not mentioned when she is present. There is a freemasonry between all the others in the house. The housekeeper and servants included. She is never admitted to it. The others have their own affairs. She stands outside.

She meets "the strange passenger." This is the name given him by the other visitors. He once felt a deep attachment to her. That was when she was engaged to the young sailor. Now he is overworked and has been ordered sea-bathing. Life has not brought him what he looked for. He is bitter. Cutting in a jocular way.

The sculptor tells his story. Was sent to sea at twelve. Shipwrecked five years ago. Was then seventeen. On that occasion he got his "lesion." Lay for a long time in the cold sea. Inflammation of the lungs followed. Has never really got over it. But it was a great piece of luck nevertheless. For it enabled him to become an artist. Think of being able to model in the delightful clay, which shapes itself so delicately between one's fingers!

What then does he think of modelling? Figures of gods? Or perhaps old vikings?

No. Nothing of that sort. As soon as he can manage it, he will have a try at a big group.
And what is it to represent?

Oh, it is to represent something out of his own experience.

And what was that? He really must tell it.

Well, it is to be a young woman, a sailor's wife, lying asleep. And she is dreaming too. One will be able to see that.

Nothing more?

Oh yes. Her husband is drowned. But he has come home nevertheless. In the night-time; and there he stands by her bedside and looks at her.

But in heaven's name—he said it was to be something out of his own experience!

Yes. This is out of his own experience. In a sense. He has seen—?!

Well—he doesn't mean to say he has actually seen it, of course. But all the same—

And then comes the tale—fragmentary and abrupt—suggesting to her terrible misgivings and apprehensions.

First Act

The lawyer's house, with a large, shady veranda on the left. Garden in front and around. At the back, a hedge, with a small gate. Beyond the hedge, a footpath along the shore, shaded by trees on either side. Between the trees there is a view of the fiord, with high mountain peaks in the distance. Brilliantly clear and warm summer morning.

The Painter stands with a large palette, painting some new posts on the veranda. The Private Teacher enters from the lawyer's office at the back of the house. Has got another execution delayed. Thoroughly good-hearted man, that lawyer. Now if only the play is brought out, we are over the worst. Teacher. Is there company expected to-day? Painter. Looks like it. The daughters are putting flowers in vases on the veranda. T. Yes, it is a gay time in the tourist season. P. To-night another of the big boats is coming. A few words are exchanged with the girls, who go backwards and forwards.—The Sculptor comes along the path, stops at the gate and enters into conversation with those within. The painter embarrassed at being seen at such common work. Good-nature of course. Bitterness against "fashionable artists," whose own country is not good enough for them. The Sculptor comes inside. Wants to borrow the palette. The girls with more flowers. S. Is it some anniversary? The younger: Yes, mother's birthday. S. Indeed! The elder (to her sister): Do be quiet! S. says good-bye and goes. T. goes also. The lawyer comes out on to the veranda. Some words are exchanged with P., who has now finished his work and goes.—Lawyer and daughters. He is not quite satisfied with the arrangements. The elder: Oh father, "the s. p." ("strange passenger") is coming this morning, you know. Lawyer smiles: Yes, yes, you're right. Observations about him. Is still good-looking. An old lion of the capital. The s. p. comes. Had so little opportunity of talking to him last night. After a while the girls go. Then a long conversation between the friends. Details about the intervening years.—The wife returns from bathing. Lawyer says she disports herself in the water like a mermaid. Yes, yes, she says, the sea is pleasanter than the dry land. Lawyer has to go and attend to his business.—Frank and confidential dialogue between the two others. She has not been really happy for the last three years. Why? Cannot tell him. It is so strange.—The sculptor comes with a large bouquet. Bows and offers his congratulations.—Why? On the occasion of the anniversary.—Is there any anniversary to-day? — Yes, it is your birthday, isn’t it? Mine! — The s. p. No, I’m sure it isn’t. Lady. What makes you think that? S. Miss B. let out the secret. She said, it is mother’s birthday to-day. L. I see! The s. p. But — Oh, just so. L. takes the flowers and thanks him. Then she enters into conversation with S. on his affairs.—Here follows the dialogue already sketched (in the 2nd sheet). S. is sent down into the garden to the girls. The s. p. finds him too green. Lawyer enters from his office. The girls from the garden room. Outburst over the beautiful flowers. Oh look! Where did they come from? Mr. P. brought them.—The s. p. For a birthday greeting. The younger: Oh —. The elder: There, you see! Lawyer (embarrassed): My dear, etc. Don’t be hurt about it—. The girls, you see—etc. Soda-water and fruit-syrup in the garden room. It is cooler. I’ll go and open the bottles. (He and the daughters go in.) The s. p. You are being wronged. You have no share in the life that is led here. L. I must not complain. For I too live my own life—in a way.—You? How?—That I cannot tell to anybody on earth.—Won’t you go in? (They go into the garden room.)

SECOND ACT

(Up at “the Prospect,” a wooded height behind the trading station. Far below the outer fiord is seen, with islands and jutting promontories. The open sea is not visible. Up on the height, a flag-staff and one or two seats. A summer night. There is a tinge of orange in the upper air and over the mountain peaks in the far distance.)
CHARACTERS

Lawyer [Doctor] Wangel. [, district physician].
Mrs. Wangel, his second wife.
Thea [Annette] } his daughters by his former marriage.
Frida, a young girl }
Hesler, a Civil servant [, a schoolmaster].
Hans Lövstad [Lyngstrand], a young sculptor.
Strömme, a merchant.
Mrs. Strömme, his wife.
Solfeldt [Ballesen], a painter.
Ballesen, a private tutor.

TOWNSPEOPLE, VISITORS, STEAMBOAT PASSENGERS, AND TOURISTS.

(The action takes place at a trading station in Northern Norway.)

END OF 1. ACT

Those lovely flowers——?
A birthday greeting (puts them in the vase). There, now they are a decoration for mother's birthday.
(The girls fall on her neck.)

1ST ACT

A feeling of summer, life and gladness everywhere. The days pass like a holiday. Thora takes her husband into her confidence after the conversation with Hesler. Wangel disturbed at hearing of her former secret engagement. Forgiveness and forgetting. Now at any rate she belongs to him alone. Hereafter there will be perfect confidence between him and her and the children. They will mutually share each other's memories. Hence-forth they will live together as husband and wife. She (agitated). As husband and wife! Yes, yes! He starts. Does not understand. She gives no further explanation.

2ND ACT

Wangel tries to find the explanation of her strange nature by means of hints and indirect enquiries in a conversation with Hesler. It is the sea that attracts her with mysterious power. Wangel speaks to her about this. Does she wish to go to the sea? Yes, yes, she wishes to go to the sea! Then he is willing to move out there! No, no, no sacrifices like that! No wrenching away from here, where is his natural home. He holds to his purpose. She: Set me free! let me go alone! For how long? For ever! I cannot live with you any longer. Then follows the explanation. It is really with him she is living in marriage!

3RD ACT

This act takes place in the secluded part of the garden, with bridge and bathing-house. Thora is staying there. Wangel comes to her. Then Hesler. Then at last Lyngstrand. Great news! The American is here! He has seen him!—Scene between Thora and Johnson. What the sea has joined, man cannot put asunder. Wangel comes. Recognises the American as the mate who killed the captain. Calls Thora to witness. She: No, no. Denies all. Johnson goes: Well, now you must get ready to go, Thora.
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

4TH ACT

Same place. Now comes the settlement between Wangel and Thora. Hesler appears. Wangel consents to Thora's going. Renounces his claim upon her.

She will leave him. Divorce. He has bought her. But yesterday you said that you saw him as he was when you parted.

She has sold herself. Feeling of shame over it. This is not pure marriage. Did I say that—You are mistaken.

The first one was so. His eyes. It was founded in freedom. In free will on both sides. This stands in the way. Oh, if she could come to love him as he deserves.

The daemonic attraction of the entirely unknown. But she does not know him! For that very reason. She did not know W. either. Arenholdt.

And then to-night the decision! For a whole lifetime. Perhaps the true future forfeited!
Life in freedom forfeited.
Tora, you love him!
I feel as though my place
were with him.
You shall see him. Speak to him.

Conclusion:
Tora: Now I come to you
of my own will.

5TH ACT

Arenholdt, Annette, Lyngstrand and Frida in a boat from left to right.
Jump ashore here. No, make fast there at the bathing-steps.
A little while after, Arenholdt and Annette come in from r.
Annette. I began to be so afraid that life would go from me.

Now he is dead to her—

FIRST ACT

The house of Wangel, the lawyer, with a large, shady veranda, on the left. Garden in front and around.
[Near the veranda, a flag-staff. To the right, in the garden, an arbour, with table and chairs.] At the back, a hedge, with a small gate. Beyond the hedge, a footpath along the shore, shaded by trees on either side. Between the trees there is a view of the fiord, with high mountain peaks in the distance. It is a warm and brilliantly clear summer morning.
(Ballesen, a middle-aged painter, dressed in an old velvet jacket and broad-brimmed hat, with the look of an artist in his costume, stands with brush and paint-pot below the veranda, painting some new wooden posts in the railing. A little way off stands an easel with a stretched canvas. Beside it, on a camp-stool, are brushes, palette, and a paint-box. He is humming as he works.)

(Thea Wangel comes out upon the veranda through the open garden-room door. She is carrying a large vase of flowers, which she places upon the table.)

Thea Wangel (looking at the freshly-painted posts). Well, Ballesen—I hope you put plenty of drying-oil into the colour?

Ballesen. Within an hour it will be as dry as a bone, Miss Wangel. I give you my word as an artist.

(Thea Wangel goes into the garden-room again.)

(Shortly afterwards, Hans Lyngstad comes along the path from the right. [He is a slightly-built young man, of delicate appearance, poorly but neatly dressed.] He stops, interested by the sight of the easel and painter's materials.)

Hans Lyngstad (outside the hedge). Good morning.

Ballesen (turning quickly). Ah—! (Puts down the paint-pot in embarrassment, and begins to busy himself at the easel.) Good morning. I take my hat off to you, sir—though I don’t think I have the pleasure—

Lyngstad. You are a painter, are you not?

Ballesen. Yes, certainly. Why should I not be a painter?

Lyngstad. Ah, I can see you are.—Should you mind my coming in for a moment?

Ballesen. Do you want to have a look at it?
"THE LADY FROM THE SEA"

Lyngstad. Yes, I should like to extremely.
Ballesen. Oh there's nothing much to see as yet. But pray come in—you're quite welcome.
Lyngstad. Many thanks. (He comes in through the garden gate.)
Ballesen (painting). I'm only sketching it in at present,—just the main outlines, you know.
Lyngstad. Yes, I see.
Ballesen. An artist yourself, perhaps?
Lyngstad. A painter, you mean?
Ballesen. Yes.
Lyngstad. No, I am not. But I am going to be a sculptor.
Ballesen. Oh indeed—are you? Well, well, sculpture, too, is a fine, gentleman-like art. (Goes back a step and looks at his picture through the hollow of his hand, with his head on one side.) I fancy I've seen you in the street once or twice. Have you been staying here long?
Lyngstad. No, I have only been here a fortnight. But I hope I may be able to stay the whole summer.
Ballesen. To enjoy the gaieties of the season, eh?
Lyngstad. Well, rather to get up my strength a bit.
Ballesen. Not an invalid, I hope?
Lyngstad. Well, I'm what you might call a little bit weak. Nothing to speak of, you know. It's only a sort of short-windedness in my chest.
Ballesen. Pooh—a mere trifle. (Puts down his palette.) But, by Jove, I was forgetting that I've promised Miss Wangel to do a bit of decorating here. (Takes the paint-pot and finishes the woodwork.) Perhaps you think it strange to see me doing this kind of thing. But I don't see anything to be ashamed of in art lending its aid to handicraft occasionally. Eh? Is there really anything to be said against it?
LYNGSTAD. No, I'm sure there can't be.

(A steamer's whistle is heard again outside.)

BALLESEN. Hullo! There's another monster howling. Now I suppose we shall be saddled with a new lot of disturbers of the peace.

LÖVSTAD. There seems to be a continual coming and going of tourists here. All these steamboats calling every single day.

BALLESEN. You might add, at night as well. Tonight the big boat for the North Cape will be here. And then we shall get them—all those who stop here to make excursions into the fiords. Ugh!

LÖVSTAD. Don't you care for all the life there is here in the summer?

BALLESEN. No, indeed I don't. For it's quite foreign to the character of the town.

LÖVSTAD. Are you a native of the place?

BALLESEN. No, I am not. But I have become attached to the place by the bonds of time and habit.

LÖVSTAD. You have lived here a long time, then?

BALLESEN. Well, seventeen or eighteen years. I came here with Varde's dramatic company. But we got into financial difficulties; so the company broke up and was scattered to the winds.

LÖVSTAD. But you remained here?

BALLESEN. Yes, I did. For the town needed me, I must tell you. You see, at that time I was working mostly in the decorating line. —

(Thea comes out with a rocking-chair, which she places in the veranda.)

THEA (speaking into the garden-room.) Frida—see if you can find the embroidered footstool for father.

LÖVSTAD (approaches the veranda and bows). Good morning, Miss Wangel.
THEA (by the balustrade). Ah, is that you, Mr. Løvstad? Good morning. Excuse me one moment—

(Goes into the house.)

BALLESEN. Do you know the family here?

LøVSTAD. Very slightly. I have met the young ladies once or twice at other houses. And I had a little talk with Mrs. Wangel the last time the band played up at the Prospect. She said I might come and see them.

BALLESEN. I'll tell you what—you ought to cultivate their acquaintance.

LøVSTAD. Yes, I've been thinking of paying them a visit—calling on them, you know. If I could only find some pretext for it.

B. Oh nonsense—a pretext—

(FRIDA comes out with the stool. THEA brings more flowers. LøVSTAD bows to FRIDA from the garden. BALLESEN collects his things and goes.)

FRIDA (by the balustrade). Thea said you were in the garden.

(WANGEL comes in from the left, behind the house.)

WANGEL. Well, here I am, little girls!

THEA. Oh, I'm so glad you have come.

(He goes up into the veranda.)

FRIDA. Have you finished at the office now, father?

WANGEL. Oh no, I must go down there again presently. I only wanted to see if Hesler had come. He hasn't, then?

THEA. No, we have seen nothing of him yet.

THEA (nodding confidentially to him). Of course you understand that it's all in honour of Mr. Hesler. When an old friend comes to pay his first visit to you——
Frida. We had the flag up for him yesterday too. When he came by the boat.

Wangel (half smiling). You are a pair of young rogues—Well, well,—after all it's only natural that we should remember—. But all the same—I don't like all this,—the manner of it. Well—what can one say? I suppose there is no other way of doing it.

Frida. Look, there he is, father.

(Hesler appears on the path, coming from the left, and goes in through the garden gate.)

Wangel (going to meet him). Welcome! A hearty welcome to you!

(They shake hands and go into the veranda together.

Hesler bows to the daughters.)

Wangel (forces him into the rocking-chair). Sit down. Sit down, old friend!

Hesler. Thanks. (Looking about him.) So here I am in my old haunts again. It is many years since I last sat here.

Wangel. Yes, it's eight whole years ago. But I suppose you recognize——?

Hesler. Perfectly. I don't think there are many changes here. Except that the trees have grown a bit, and you have planted a new arbour there——

Wangel. Oh no, outwardly, I dare say——

Hesler. And now, of course, you have two grown-up daughters in the house.

Wangel. Oh, only one grown-up, surely.

Frida (half aloud). Just listen to father!

Wangel. But now you shall just sit quiet and have a good rest. You are looking rather tired after your journey.

Thea. Shall we bring a little soda-water and syrup into the garden-room? It will soon be too warm out here.
Wangel. Yes, do, little girls. Soda-water and syrup. And perhaps a little cognac.

Thea. Cognac too?

Wangel. Just a little. In case any one should care for it.

Thea. Very well.

(She and Frída go into the garden-room and close the door behind them.)

Wangel (seats himself). Are you thinking of taking a regular course of baths here?

Hesler. Not at all. I have no need of that. I am just going to be idle for a month. And not think about anything at all.

Wangel. And not overwork yourself again when you get back.

Hesler. Well, what the deuce is one to do? When there isn't a blessed thing on earth that's worth devoting one's self to and living for, it makes one glad that there is such a thing as work. And so one works until one drops.

Wangel. I don't think I could ever bring myself to do that.

Hesler. You don't care for it?

Wangel. Not for working more than is absolutely necessary.

Hesler. No, no—of course you have other things—and others—to live for.—Do you intend to remain here for the rest of your days?

Wangel. Oh yes, that's what it will come to, I suppose. Here I have lived very very happily with her who was taken from us. And now I live very very happily with one who has come to me in her stead.—I must say that, take it all in all, the fates have been kind to me.

Hesler. Is your wife not at home to-day?

Wangel. Oh yes, she'll be here very soon. She has gone to bathe. She never misses a day at this season, no matter what the weather may be.

Hesler. Is she out of health?

Wangel. No, not exactly; but she has been curiously nervous the last couple of years or so. But to get into the sea is life and happiness to her.

Hesler. I remember that of old.

Wangel. Yes, to be sure, you knew her when you held an appointment out there.

Hesler. Of course. I used often to be at the parsonage while her father was alive.

(Mrs. Wangel, with a large light cloak over her head and shoulders, comes along the path from the right and through the garden gate.)

Wangel (rising). Ah, here comes the mermaid!

(Mrs. Wangel goes quickly up into the veranda. Hesler rises and bows.)

Hesler. H'm—. Have you ever told your husband anything about me—about you and me?

Mrs. Wangel. No, I have not. I don't see that it was my duty. For it never came to anything between us.

Hesler. There you are certainly right. But I mean, have you told him that I once took an unsuccessful step—?

Mrs. Wangel. Not a word of it. I have only told him what is true—that I liked you very much, and that you were the truest and best friend I had out there.

Hesler. At that time—engaged!
Mrs. Wangel. Yes, engaged, as it is called.

Hesler. But that is impossible! You are mistaking the time. I don’t believe you knew Wangel then. And anyhow he was not yet a widower.

Mrs. Wangel. I know that, my dear Hesler. But it is not Wangel that I am speaking of.

Hesler. Not Wangel! Another then! But at that time—! Out there in the solitude by the open sea—. I don’t remember another creature that I could conceive your—

Mrs. Wangel. Oh, you couldn’t conceive the possibility, even if I told you—. No, no—for the whole thing was such utter madness on my part.

Hesler. Do tell me more about this—

Mrs. Wangel. No, no, my dear Hesler—what would be the use? It is enough for you to know that I was not free at that time. And now you do know it.

Hesler. And if you had been free at that time—?

Mrs. Wangel. What then?

Hesler. Would your answer have been different?

Mrs. Wangel. To be perfectly frank with you, I don’t think it would.

Hesler. Nor I either. But then, what is the use of telling me this?

Mrs. Wangel (rises nervously). Because I must have some one I can speak to about it. No, no, don’t rise.

Hesler. Wangel, then, knows nothing of the matter?

Mrs. Wangel. No. No one has ever known anything. I did not think there was anything to tell him. After all, it was nothing but the maddest of madness; and then it all came to an end so quickly. Was done with.

—At least—in a way.

Hesler (rising). Only in a way? Not entirely!
MRS. WANGEL. Oh yes, of course! My dear good Hesler, it is not at all as you suppose. It's something quite incomprehensible. I don't think I could find words to tell you of it. And even if I could, you would never be able to understand it. You would think I was ill—or else that I was stark mad.

HESLER. My dear Mrs. Wangel—now you must and shall tell me the whole story.

MRS. WANGEL. Well then—how should you, with your common sense, ever be able to understand that—(Breaks off.) Wait—another time—here is some one coming.

LYNGSTRAND. Well, you see, when we were lying in the brig over in Montreal, we had to leave our boatswain in the hospital; so we shipped an American in his place. And then we put to sea. We were bound for Spain. This new boatswain—

MRS. WANGEL. The American?

LYNGSTRAND. Yes;—one day he borrowed from the captain a bundle of old newspapers that he had come across somewhere. There were many Norwegian papers among them. And it was mostly those he read.

MRS. WANGEL. The American?

HESLER. Did he know Norwegian?

LYNGSTRAND. Yes, he knew some. He had sailed to Norway, he said.

MRS. WANGEL. Well; and then?

LYNGSTRAND. Well, one evening it was blowing great guns. All hands were on deck—all except the boatswain and me. For he had sprained his ankle and couldn't walk; and I wasn't very well and was lying in my bunk. Well, there he sat in the fo'c'sle, reading away as usual at one of the old papers—
Mrs. Wangel. Was it a Norwegian paper?

Lyngstrand. Yes, it was [I don’t know]. And [But] all of a sudden, I heard him give a kind of a roar. And when I turned and looked at him, I saw that his face was as white as chalk. Then he sat crumpling and crushing the paper up, and tearing it into a thousand little pieces. But that he did quite quietly.

Mrs. Wangel. Did he not speak at all?

Lyngstrand. Not at first. But presently he looked at me and said, as if to himself: “She has gone and married another man while I was away.”

Mrs. Wangel (half to herself). Did he say that?

Lyngstrand. Yes, and he said it in perfectly good Norwegian. He must have been a Norwegian after all—[must have sailed in Norwegian ships, I should think].

Mrs. Wangel. Well, Mr. Lyngstrand, I am sure you can make a work of art out of this.

Lyngstrand. Yes, don’t you think so? I think I must be able to.

Mrs. Wangel. Is the dead man to represent what she is dreaming of?

Lyngstrand. Oh yes, he is. But then he is to be a real man at the same time.

Hesler. Who is drowned and has come home afterwards?

Lyngstrand. Yes, I had thought of something of the sort. But I find it so difficult to explain what I mean. You will be able to understand it when I have finished the work.

Mrs. Wangel (with slight hesitation). How long may it be since you made that voyage with the American?

Lyngstrand. Oh, it’s a long while ago now, Mrs. Wangel. It’s more than two years ago. We left America in February and were wrecked in March. It was the equinoctial gales that we got into.

Mrs. Wangel. Two years, do you say? Yes, that agrees.

Hesler. What, do you mean?

Mrs. Wangel. Oh no, it was only— (Rises.) It seems to me so hot here. Come, let us go in.

Thea and Frida. Ah!

Wangel. H'm—. Well, you see, my dear Thora—

Mrs. Wangel. Come along, girls! Let us put these up among the others.

Thea and Frida (throwing their arms around her). Oh you dear—! How sweet of you!

Wangel (puts his arm round her). Thank you, thank you! I thank you from my heart for this, Thora!

Mrs. Wangel. Oh, nonsense—why should I not join with you in keeping mother's birthday?

(They go up into the veranda, in joyful excitement. Hesler follows them.)

FROM THE SECOND ACT

Frida. Pooh—supposing it is true, what—(Looks down). Hullo—here he comes with them in tow! Look there! There she is, walking with Hesler—not with father—and jabbering away to him! I wonder whether she isn't a bit sweet on that Hesler.

Wangel (smiling). Well, in this case it was not necessary to ask any question. I scarcely needed to be told who it was—
Mrs. Wangel. Could you——!

Wangel. —so that I was not at all surprised when at last he came here again.

Mrs. Wangel. Who, who?

Wangel. To be sure, he wrote that it was because of the girls. That he wanted so much to see them again——

Mrs. Wangel (jestingly). Oh, then he was careful of what he said.

Wangel. You too were a girl when he last saw you. And so you must have remained in his recollection.

Mrs. Wangel. But, my dear Wangel, I assure you——. I beg you——!

Wangel. Be quite easy about it. I shall not let him see anything. Hesler is a good and faithful friend of mine. I rely on him with as much confidence as I do on yourself.

Mrs. Wangel. That you may certainly do. But I tell you—it was not Hesler.

Wangel. H'm, how obstinate you can be at times. Wasn't Hesler tutor out there on the island the winter before he came to us?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, he was.

Wangel. Well. And wasn't it just that winter that this took place, this affair of the engagement?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, you're right there again.

Wangel. Very well. Then, will you tell me, my dear good Thora, whether at that time there was any other decent, respectable unmarried man out there, to whom this might refer?

Mrs. Wangel. No. There was certainly no such person.—But—— Wangel. But——?

Mrs. Wangel. Well, now I must and will tell you. It was not any decent, respectable man——

Wangel (starts up). Not any decent, respectable——!

Mrs. Wangel. Not one that you would call so.

Wangel. What is there behind all this? Let me hear the whole story.

Mrs. Wangel. Do you remember that, in the late autumn one year, a large American ship came into Skioldvik for repairs?

Wangel. Yes, I remember it well. It was on board her that the captain was found murdered in his cabin one morning. I remember going to make the post-mortem.

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, I know you did.

Wangel. It was an ordinary seaman who had killed him.

Mrs. Wangel. No one can tell that! It was never proved.

Wangel. There is no doubt about it. Why, he ran away immediately afterwards. Though, to be sure, some people thought he had gone and drowned himself.

Mrs. Wangel. He did not. He escaped in a vessel bound for the north.

Wangel (starts). How do you know that?

Mrs. Wangel. Because, Wangel—because it was that ordinary seaman to whom I was betrothed.

Wangel. What do you say? Can this be possible?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, he was the man.

Wangel. But how in the world, Thora—! And as far as I remember he was nothing but a lad at the time.

Mrs. Wangel. Oh no, he was at any rate a year or two older than I. But we were both young, of course.

Wangel. And you went and engaged yourself to him!

What was his name?
Mrs. Wangel. He called himself Johnson.

Wangel. Where did he come from?

Mrs. Wangel. I don’t know.

Wangel. But you can tell whether he was a Norwegian or a foreigner?

Mrs. Wangel. I don’t know for certain. He spoke good Norwegian. But there was something foreign about it.

Wangel. Then did you never ask him?

Mrs. Wangel. No, not very often. Not so much as five times altogether, I think. For then came this affair about the captain; and he had to go away.

Wangel. Oh yes, let me hear about that.

Mrs. Wangel. Early one morning, in the dusk, I got a line from him, and it said that I must come out to him at Bakkehammer—you know, the headland between the parsonage and Skioldvik—

Wangel. Yes, yes—I know.

Mrs. Wangel. —I must come there immediately, for he wanted to speak to me.

Wangel. And you went?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, you may be sure I did—then. Well, he said that he had stabbed the captain in the night—

Wangel. He told you himself! Straight out!

Mrs. Wangel. Yes. But he had only done what was right and just, he said.

Wangel. Right and just? What reason did he give, then, for stabbing him?

Mrs. Wangel. He would not tell me the reason. He said it was not a thing for me to hear about.
Wangel. And you believed him?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, you may be sure I did—then. Well, he had to go away. But when he was on the point of saying good-bye to me, he did a strange thing. He did it quite calmly and quietly. For that was his way. Always calm and quiet.

Wangel. What was it he did?

Mrs. Wangel. He took a key-ring out of his pocket, and drew off his finger a ring he used to wear. Then he took from me a little ring that I had, and these two he fastened together on the key-ring. Then he said that now we two should together be wedded to the sea.

Wangel. Wedded——?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, so he said. And then he flung the large ring and the two small ones far, far out into the sea. Don't you think that was strange?

Wangel. And you—? Did you agree to that?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, would you believe it, at the time I only thought that it was something—that it was all as it should be. But then he went away.

Wangel. And when once he was away?

Mrs. Wangel. Oh, good heavens, you can understand, my dear, that I soon saw how utterly foolish and stupid and meaningless the whole thing had been.

Wangel. Yes, yes. But was that the end of it? Did you never hear from him afterwards?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, I heard from him.

Wangel. He wrote——?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes. As soon as he reached England I got a line or two from him. He said he was going on to America, and told me where to address a letter.

Wangel. Did you write?

Mrs. Wangel. Immediately. I said, of course, that all must be over between us—that he must never think of me again, as I meant never to think any more of him.

Wangel. Did he stop then?
Mrs. Wangel. No.
Wangel. He wrote again.
Mrs. Wangel. Yes, he wrote again.
Wangel. And what was his answer to what you had said?
Mrs. Wangel. Not a word. He wrote just as if I had never broken with him. He told me quite calmly that I must wait for him. When he was ready for me he would let me know, and then I was to come to him at once.

Wangel. He would not release you?
Mrs. Wangel. No. So I wrote again, almost word for word the same as before: only more strongly.
Wangel. And did he give way?
Mrs. Wangel. Oh, no, far from it. He wrote as calmly as before. Never a word about my having broken with him. Then I saw it was useless, so I wrote to him no more.

Wangel. But he——?
Mrs. Wangel. I have had three letters from him since. Once he wrote from California and once from China. The last letter I got from him was from Australia. He said he was going to the gold-mines; since then I have heard nothing more from him.
Wangel. That man must have had an extraordinary power over you, Thora.

Mrs. Wangel. Oh yes, yes. That dreadful man! Oh, how happy and secure I felt when you and I came together. It seemed to me as if you had saved me from myself—and from something terrible both within me and without.
Wangel. (in a low voice). Yes, we were happy indeed—the first three years.

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, yes, we were. And then—to think of it—then this—this other thing was to come over me.

Wangel. This mental ailing, you mean? Yes, it is hard. Hard for us both. But do try now to calm yourself, my dear, my precious Thora. We will try another cure for you now. A fresher air than in here. The salt-laden, sweeping sea-breezes, dear! What do you say to that?

Mrs. Wangel. Oh, don't speak of it! Don't think of such a thing! There is no help for me in that. I know, I feel, that I should not be able to throw it off out there either.

Wangel. To throw off what, dear? What do you mean?

Mrs. Wangel (as though brooding over something). I mean the terror of him.

Wangel. Yes, but what is it after all that is so terrible to you?

Mrs. Wangel (looking at him despondingly). What I have just told you.

Wangel. Well—terrible? But would you really call it so? No doubt that man once exercised a tremendous power over you. That one can easily understand. But such a thing is not nearly so rare as you seem to think. I have had opportunities of observing several similar cases. And besides—you had the strength to break it all off. To put an end to it as soon as you were able to reflect a little. What is there left to brood over? It is all over, long ago.

Mrs. Wangel (springs up). No, that is just what it is not! And that is the terror of it!
Wangel. Not over!

Mrs. Wangel. No, it is not over! And I am afraid it never will be over. Never in this life. That is what is so terrible to think of.

Wangel (in a low, agitated voice). Do you mean to say that you have never in your heart of hearts been able to forget him?

Mrs. Wangel. No, there was a time when he came to mean nothing to me. It was just as though he had never existed. Oh, I felt so free and relieved for those three years. They were the first three years I lived here with you, Wangel.

Wangel (in suspense). And now—! Do you mean then that now it has come over you again?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, now it has come again. With frightful force. It came like this two years ago.

Wangel (painfully moved). Ah! Two years ago? That was it! In that case, Thora, I begin to understand much more clearly.

Mrs. Wangel. You are wrong, dear—this thing that has come over me—oh, I don't think it can ever be understood!

Wangel (half to himself). To think that for two years her heart has been given to a strange man. To another! Not to me—but to another!

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, yes, to you! To you alone! To no one in the whole world:

Wangel. Oh, Thora! Oh yes, yes, I knew that. But what is it then—. What is it between you and the strange man—?

Mrs. Wangel. It is the dread he casts over me—

Wangel. Dread?

Mrs. Wangel. Yes, a dread. Such a dread, such a terror, as arises only from the sea. For now I must tell you, Wangel—

(Young people, men and girls, come in from the left, some in couples, some in groups. A few tourists among them. Finally Hesler, Lyngstrand, Thea and Frida come. They are no longer walking arm in arm.)

Wangel. Dear Thora—why did you cross-question him about that voyage?

Mrs. Wangel. Because I believe—. (Breaking out.) Now I have learnt something about Johnson.

Wangel. What have you learnt?

Mrs. Wangel. Johnson was on board the ship in which Lyngstrand was wrecked. Of that I am perfectly certain.

Wangel. My dear, what makes you think so?

Mrs. Wangel. Something Lyngstrand mentioned this morning. Johnson came to know, during the voyage—in some way or other—I don’t know how. He came to know that I had married. Had married while he was away. And then this came!

Wangel. What came?

Mrs. Wangel. That Johnson all at once became so fearfully present to me. I seemed to see him before me wherever I went.

Wangel. Did he appear to you as you had seen him in reality?

Mrs. Wangel. No, I don’t see him like that. Not so young as he was then. I see him older. And I see him with a beard. A reddish beard. He did not have a beard then. There is one thing especially that I see with such fearful clearness.
"THE LADY FROM THE SEA" 359

Wangel. Now——!
Mrs. Wangel. He always wears a red neck-cloth and it is fastened with a large, bluish-white pearl—a scarf-pin, you know——
Wangel. Yes, yes.
Mrs. Wangel. And when I think of that pin, it seems to turn into a dead fish's eye, that looks at me. Looks fixedly at me.
Wangel. Good God——. You are more ill than I thought; more ill than you know yourself, Thora. And you have been in this state for over two years. You have suffered this secret anguish without confiding in me.
Mrs. Wangel. Oh, how could I have the heart to do that. In you! In you, whom I love so dearly. But now I must tell you all. For I feel it closing round me more and more. Therefore I must now tell you the most fearful thing of all.
Wangel. Yes, tell me that——do tell me that!
Mrs. Wangel. The most fearful thing is that when the strange man became so living to me, then——Oh——
Wangel. Then?
Mrs. Wangel. Then I seemed to lose you, Wangel!
Wangel. Lose? How——?
Mrs. Wangel. When you were [are] not present, I could [can] no longer recall [retain] your appearance. It was [is] the strange man that I saw [see] instead of you.
Wangel. Explain yourself more clearly, Thora.
Mrs. Wangel. I mean that when you are out in a boat and a storm comes on and I am waiting here in mortal fear for you, it is not you that I picture to myself in the boat——. Or rather, it is you, but I see you in the likeness of the strange man.—And then the unspeakable.
Wangel. The unspeakable——?
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Mrs. Wangel. No, no, no!— Only one thing more, and I have done. Wangel—how shall we fathom—that about the child's eyes—

---

FROM THE THIRD ACT

Thora (softly and trembling). Oh, do you hear that, Wangel? He is coming back!

Wangel. Do not be alarmed. We shall find means to prevent it.

The Stranger. Good-bye for the present, Thora. To-morrow evening then.

Thora (with a shriek). Don't look at me like that! Oh, the eyes, the eyes!

Wangel. The eyes! What do you mean by that—

The Stranger. And if by that time you should be of a mind to come with me—

Thora. Never! Never to the end of time! Never!

The Stranger. I only mean that in that case you must be ready to start. To-morrow evening then, you understand.

Thora. Never, I say! Go, go!

Wangel. Go into the house, Thora!

Thora. I cannot. Oh, help me! Save me, Wangel!

The Stranger. For you must remember this, that if you do not come with me this time, it will be too late.

Thora. Too late—?

The Stranger. Beyond recall, Thora. I shall never return to these parts. You will never see me any more nor hear from me either. I shall be as though dead and gone from you, for evermore.

Thora (breathing as though relieved). Ah—!
THE STRANGER. So think carefully what you do. Good-bye. (He climbs over the fence, stops, and says:) Well, Thora—be ready to start to-morrow evening; for then I will come and take you away.

(He goes slowly and calmly along the footpath and out to the right.)

THORA (looks after him a while). Oh, that terrible creature!

Wangel. Be calm, be calm. He is gone now, and you shall never see him again.

Thora. Oh, how can you say that? He is coming again to-morrow [night].

Wangel. Let him come: I will see that he does not meet you.

Thora. Do you think you can prevent that? Oh, I don’t know any place on earth where I can be safe from him.

Wangel. Before all else you must try to get him out of your ailing mind.

Thora. Yes, yes, if I only could. (Looking away.) So sure he was that I would go with him.— Have you ever heard or seen a man so sure as he is, Wangel!

Wangel. You must put him out of your thoughts, I say.

Thora. Yes, if one only could.

Wangel. You must! You must! You don’t know what it may lead to otherwise.

Thora (musing). When he has been here—to-morrow evening.— And [when] he has gone away in the steamer—.

Wangel. Well, what then?

Thora. Do you think he will never come again?

Wangel. No, dear Thora, you may feel absolutely secure on that point.
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Thora. Never again? Never as long as life lasts. Do you think that?

Wangel. That I am certain of. You will never see him again.

Thora (involuntarily). Never—

Wangel. How can you be afraid of that? What could he do here after this? Do look at it reasonably, dear. He has heard now, from your own lips, that you will have nothing to do with him.

Thora. No. That is certain. To-morrow evening—. And then never again.

FROM THE FOURTH ACT

Wangel. Tell me, Mr. Lyngstrand—that American you were speaking of yesterday—do you know much about him?

Lyngstrand. No, not much. Only that we were shipmates one voyage.

Wangel. Do you remember his name?

Lyngstrand. Yes, it was Frimann, or something like that.

Wangel. And then he shipped as nothing more than boatswain.

Lyngstrand. Yes, it was a boatswain we happened to want. And he wanted to get across. So he took the berth.

Wangel. Now he is travelling as a tourist, it seems.

Lyngstrand. Did you see him too, Doctor?

Wangel. I saw a stranger pass below there. It must have been he.— Tell me, what sort of a man did you think he was? I mean, when you were shipmates with him.
Lyngstrand. He seemed to me to be a quiet, calm man. But very determined.

Wangel. Very determined?

Lyngstrand. Yes, he was. But that was in a quiet way, too. I only remember one time when he became quite ungovernable.

Wangel. Oh yes. That time you were speaking of yesterday——.

Lyngstrand. —that I am going to put into sculpture, yes. I am so glad both you and Mrs. Wangel think so well of that idea.

Wangel. How—? Oh yes, yes.

(He goes over to Hesper, who is standing by the piano.)

Annette (softly to Lyngstrand). I'll wager my life it was the strange man who came and enquired.

Lyngstrand. For Mrs. Wangel!

Annette. I don't know whom he enquired for.

Lyngstrand. Yes, it was Mrs. Wangel. But what on earth——!

Annette. Well, come along. Come along.

(She and Lyngstrand go with Frida down through the garden.)

Wangel (to Hesper). Have you given any more thought to it?

Hesper. I have thought of nothing else, ever since we parted.

Wangel. And what do you think I ought to do in the matter?

Hesper. My dear Doctor, I think that you, as a physician, ought to know better than I.

Wangel. H'm. This is no common disorder. And no case for an ordinary physician—or for ordinary remedies.
Hesler. How is she to-day?

Wangel. I have just been up to see her, and she appeared to me quite calm. But behind all her moods something seems to be hidden that eludes me entirely. And then she is so variable, so incalculable, so subject to sudden changes.

Hesler. No doubt that is due to her morbid state of mind.

Wangel. Not entirely. The germ of it all is innate in her. Thora belongs to the sea-folk: that is the trouble.

Hesler. What do you mean precisely, my dear Doctor?

Wangel. The people who live out by the open sea are like a race apart. Widely different from the people of the fiords. Out there they live the life of the sea. And they never bear transplantation. I should have thought of that before. It was a sin against her to take her away from the sea and bring her in here.

Hesler. Have you come to look at it in that light?

Wangel. Yes, more and more. Especially in the last year or two.—But I ought to have known it from the first. I ought to have known that she would inevitably pine and languish in here. Oh, I did know it too, but I would not acknowledge it. I loved her so much. And consequently I thought first of myself. In fact, I was utterly and unpardonably selfish.

Hesler. I am afraid every one is selfish under those circumstances. But I can't say that I have noticed that vice in you.

Wangel. Oh yes. But I try to fight against it.

Hesler. Let us speak frankly. Was it mutual affection that brought you and her together?

Wangel. No, I can't say it was. Not that kind of feeling on her side. When her father was drowned—her mother was subject to melancholy, you know—the new lighthouse-keeper was expected. They had to leave the house. Oh, I ought never to have availed myself of her helpless situation. But I did so nevertheless.

HESLER. And it was only gradually that you won her?

WANGEL. I thought at any rate that I had won her. There seemed to be signs of that. But then this melancholy came upon her. Oh, what remorse I felt. For I was to blame. I had taken her by surprise. Almost by force, I may say. For, you see, she had no choice. And I was at my wits' end to know what to do.— That is why I turned to you in my perplexity, and asked you to come to us.

HESLER. Yes, my dear Doctor, but what good did you suppose I could do? I don't understand.

WANGEL. No. For I had got upon a wrong scent. I fancied that she had once cared for you, and that she still secretly cared for you. So I thought it might perhaps do her good to see you again.

HESLER. Then it was your wife you meant when you wrote that some one here was waiting for me!

WANGEL. Yes; who else?

HESLER. Of course. But I did not understand you.

WANGEL. Naturally not. I was on a wrong scent.

HESLER. Then, although you thought your wife had an inclination for me—cared for me—you nevertheless wrote for me. Asked me to come here——

WANGEL. I was bent upon seeing her cheerful again. Rejecting no expedient. Come of it what might.

HESLER. And you think you are selfish——

WANGEL. Oh, I had such a great error to atone for. But don't tell her I wrote for you. She believes you came here of your own accord. Tell her nothing.
Hesler. Not a word, since you wish it. Well, after all, it was a good thing I came here. That the misunderstanding was cleared up. For now you know that her heart is not with any other man.

Wangel. No, it is wholly and solely the dread of this stranger that haunts her thus.

Hesler. How do you explain the power he exercises over her?

Wangel. H'm, my dear friend, there are sides to that question that don't admit of explanation.

Hesler. Something inexplicable, do you mean? Entirely inexplicable?

Wangel. Inexplicable to the understanding of our time, at any rate. To the science of our time.

Hesler. Do you believe in such things?

Wangel. I neither believe nor disbelieve. I simply do not know. So I suspend my judgment. [For I am not really a man of science, I must tell you. I have——]

Hesler. But tell me—. That strange, uncanny idea of hers about the child's eyes——?

Wangel (eagerly). I don't in the least believe that about the eyes. That is pure imagination on her part. I take that to be nothing but an outcome of her morbid nervous condition. Nothing else!

Hesler. But then the other point: that this haunting fear, this dread and unrest came upon her just at the very time when this stranger would seem to have been on his way home?

Wangel. Well, that again is a belief she has imagined and dreamt herself into, since the day before yesterday. It did not come upon her at all so suddenly, so instantaneously, as she now maintains. But since she heard from this young Lyngstrand that Johnson, or whatever he is called, was on his way home three years ago in March, she believes that her mental suffering came over her in the very same month.

HESLER. And did it [not]?

WANGEL. Not at all. It had been noticeable long before that. It is true she had a sharp attack precisely in the month of March, three years ago——

HESLER. Well then——!

WANGEL. Oh, but that is quite easily accounted for by the circumstances—the condition—she happened to be in at that time.

HESLER. The indications may be read in either way, then.

WANGEL. And to be powerless to help her! To have neither resource nor remedy!

HESLER. What if you made up your mind to a change of residence—to move to some other place, where you would live under wider, less restricted conditions?

WANGEL. I have suggested that to her. But she will not.

HESLER. Not that either.

(Goes up towards the window on the left.)

WANGEL. Oh, I should be so glad to make any possible sacrifice.

(TORA enters by the door on the left.)

TORA (rapidly to WANGEL). Be sure you do not go out this morning!

WANGEL. No, no, certainly not; I will stay at home with you. (Points to HESLER.) But you haven’t said good morning——?

TORA (turns). Oh, are you there, Mr. Hesler! (Holds out her hand.) Good morning.

HESLER. Good morning, Mrs. Wangel. So you’re not bathing to-day?
TORA. No, no. Don't speak to me of bathing. The water is sickly here in the fiord. Won't you sit down?
HESLER. No, thank you. Not now. (Looks at WANGEL.) I promised the girls I would join them in the garden.
WANGEL. Well, my dear friend—I won't keep you.
TORA. You will probably find them by the pond.
HESLER. I shall find them, I'm sure.
(He nods and passes across the veranda and out to the right.)

WANGEL (rising). Then have the years we have lived together been utterly wasted for you?
TORA. Oh, don't think that. I have had all from you that any one could possibly desire. But the years have given me a clearer insight. The sense of shame has awakened in me. I see it now—the life we lead is no real and true marriage.

WANGEL. I can strengthen you in fighting against it.
TORA. Yes, if I had the will to fight against it.
WANGEL. Have you not the will?
TORA. Oh, that is just what I don't know.
WANGEL. You must try to make sure of yourself. The decision is to-night.
TORA. Yes, think of it—! The decision so near. The decision for all time.
WANGEL. To-morrow he will be gone. Then you will be free [of him]. [And then you will be free of all your doubts——]
TORA. Perhaps I shall have forfeited my true future.
WANGEL. Your true——?
Tora. A life of freedom forfeited!
Wangel. Tora—do you love this man [stranger]?
Tora. Do I—? Oh how can I tell.
Wangel. That you must try to find out.
Tora. It is no use. I only know that to me he is mysterious, and that—oh!
Wangel. —and that—?
Tora. —and that I feel as though my place were with him.
Wangel. I begin to understand.
Tora. And what help have you for me? What remedy do you know of?
Wangel. To-morrow. He will be gone. Then you will be safe from disaster; then I promise to set you free. We will cancel the bargain, Tora!
Tora. Oh Wangel——!
Wangel (looks out into the garden). More another time.

(Arenholdt, Annette, Lyngstrand, Frida, and Ballested appear behind the arbour. Ballested is carrying his painting materials.)

Arenholdt (coming up on to the veranda). Ah, I can tell you we have been laying great plans.
Frida. We want to go out in a boat this evening, and——

Lyngstrand. [B.] No, no, don’t tell!
Wangel. We two have also been laying plans.
Arenholdt. No, really?
Wangel. My wife is going to Skioldvik for a time.
Annette. Going away?
Arenholdt. That is very wise.
Wangel. Tora wants to go home again; home to the sea.
Lyngstrand. "The Lady from the Sea." Yes, one can understand that.

Ballested. Understand it perfectly. The dying mermaid on the dry land—

Tora. Why do you call me that!

Ballested. Oh no. I was only thinking of my picture. Good-bye, good-bye.

(Goes out by the garden gate.)

Frida (softly to Annette). Now they've been having another conference.

(A maid-servant opens the door on the right.)

Wangel. To table. Come along, Arenholdt! We will drink a parting cup with "the lady from the sea."

(They all go towards the door on the right.)

FROM THE FIFTH ACT

Ellida. I must speak with him myself. If you will not set me free, then he must do so. One of the marriages must be dissolved.

Wangel. You yourself have dissolved the relationship that in your morbid excitability you call a marriage. You have dissolved it and that is enough.

Ellida. No, no, that is not enough. What is the use of your putting forward a thousand rational arguments. It does not help me in the least, if my own feelings are different.

Wangel. And they are so still.

Ellida. They will always be so. I shall always feel as I do now. I am not made like you. You can lead your life of reality here with me, and feel secure and happy in it—and at the same time continue to live with your memories.
Wangel. Oh, if I could only make you understand how immensely different the two things are!

Ellida. Not to me. I cannot lead such a dual existence. I cannot continue in it any longer. Impossible! Perfectly impossible. Either wholly with you or wholly with him!

Wangel. All these are confused feminine ideas, Ellida! Confused feminine fancies. What do you gain by his releasing you from your promise, as you call it. Does that make you free? Do you suppose it will break the power he exercises over you?

Ellida. Ah, I don’t know! I don’t know.

Wangel. Oh yes, you may be sure that it will not be so. It is not from without that your liberation will come. Not from any one else. It is from within—from yourself that liberation must come.

Ellida. Oh yes, yes. Do you think I don’t feel that. But you see, Wangel—that is just the terrible part of it, that—

Wangel. That—?

Ellida. —that I often feel as though I did not wish for liberation either.

Wangel. Then I know no help for you.

Ellida. Oh, don’t say that so confidently. There must surely be something in the world—something between heaven and earth, that could force my will to extricate me from all this.

Wangel. I know of nothing.

Ellida. And yet it is you I count upon, Wangel. You I expect help from. You alone.

Wangel. From me, with whom you will not live any longer.

Ellida. Will?
Wangel. Yes, will.
Ellida. Say rather, can.
Wangel (looks searchingly at her). In that there is hope.
Ellida. Yes, do you not think so.

Annette. How could father say such a thing!
Askeholm. It appears that was not what he meant. But I came here in that belief. And I think it is quite excusable, Annette. So many a young girl comes to regard her tutor with more than ordinary attachment—

Annette. Yes, yes, I know that [—in her school-days].

Askeholm. I have myself more than once had occasion to observe something of the sort. But then the young girls leave school and enter life. Other connections are formed, and nothing is left of their relation to the tutor than a warm friendship—a little bashful, perhaps—

Annette. Yes, that is just how it is—!
Askeholm. —a little inclined to avoid dwelling on school-days [the last year at school]. Well then, I got your father’s letter—

Annette. Yes, but that letter—
Askeholm. Now you mustn’t interrupt me, dear Annette. I thought at any rate that I had come upon an exception. I accustomed myself to the thought that here was a young girl waiting and longing for me to come again. When a man, like myself, is no longer in the first flush of youth, such a belief or illusion makes an exceedingly strong impression. A vivid affection for you grew up in me, Annette. I felt I must come to you; see you again; tell you that I shared the feelings which I imagined you entertained for me.
"THE LADY FROM THE SEA" 373

Annette. But now, when you know that it was not so——?

The Stranger. I was not thinking of travelling—clothes and trunks and that sort of thing. I have on board with me everything she requires for the voyage; and I have taken a cabin. (To Ellida.) I ask, if you will go with me.

Ellida. If I will——!

The Stranger. Yes, you must choose now. In half an hour it will be too late.

Ellida. What makes you hold to me so persistently?

The Stranger. Do you not feel, as I do, that we two belong to each other?

Ellida. Do you mean because of that promise, which——?

The Stranger. Promises bind no one: neither man nor woman. If I hold to you persistently, it is because I cannot do otherwise.

Ellida. Why did you not come sooner?

Wangel. Ellida——!

(The Stranger climbs slowly over the garden fence and comes nearer.)

Ellida (shrinks behind Wangel). What is it? What do you want?

The Stranger. You ask why I did not come sooner.

Ellida. Yes, I asked that.

The Stranger. Three years ago I was on my way to you. At last I had been so far successful that I could come for you. Take you home with me, Ellida.

Wangel. Where is your home?
The Stranger. A little everywhere. Spread over the whole earth. And over the whole sea too, I think.

Ellida. And to that vast home you would have brought me then!

The Stranger. I would have, yes. But then came the shipwreck in the Channel. All gone, lock, stock and barrel, all that I had scraped together. Then to work again. For you, Ellida. Now I am back here. For the last time. Will you come with me? Or will you stay here with him!

Wangel (looking at her). Choose!

Ellida. Oh, I cannot—! I don’t know—!

(A bell is heard in the distance.)

The Stranger. There goes the warning bell. Now you must say yes or no.

Ellida. To have to decide! To decide for all time! To do what can never be undone!

The Stranger. Never.

Ellida. If I went with you—?

Wangel. If you went—!

Ellida. —should I be going to my happiness!

The Stranger. You must find that out. I cannot tell you anything certain.

Ellida. Oh, what is it that tempts and allures and seems to drag me into the unknown! The whole might of the sea is centred in this one thing.

Wangel. I see it. I see it. Step by step you are gliding away from me.

Ellida. If I let him go away alone—. If I stay behind with you—Wangel—can you assure me that I shall never come to regret it?

Wangel. Never regret—?

Ellida. Yes, yes, for it can never be undone! Can you assure me that I shall never come to regret it?
Wangel. No, Ellida—I cannot.

(The bell is heard again.)

The Stranger (to Ellida). There is the second bell.

Ellida (goes up to him and lays her hand on his arm.) Then I am going with you.

Wangel (to himself). I knew it.

The Stranger. At last you have made your choice, Ellida.

Ellida. There is no choice in this. I am going with you because I must. Cannot do otherwise.

The Stranger. No, for I am the strongest. But now you shall hear what I have to offer you. I would not tell you anything before. For I did not wish to entice you. Of your own will you were to go where I go. But now you shall hear——

Ellida. I will hear nothing! It is the unknown that draws me. Into that I will go.

Wangel. Let me give you a little assistance on the way, Ellida.

Ellida. What do you mean?

Wangel. I do not wish your happiness to be clouded by remorse or regret at the thought of me. You are not leaving me against your will. I set you free. I cancel our bargain.

Ellida. Is this true, Wangel. Do you mean it from your inmost heart?

Wangel. Yes, from the inmost depths of my heart I mean it.

Ellida. And can you do it?

Wangel. I can, because I love you.

Ellida. And you have come to love me so truly and so dearly.
Wangel. The years of our marriage have brought this about.

Ellida. And I have been blind to it.

Wangel. Your thoughts went in other directions. Listen to me, Ellida. It would have been easy for me to prevent your going away with this stranger. I do not prevent you. You are now a free woman, with full right to go where you will.

Ellida. This transforms everything.

(The steamer bell rings for the third time.)

The Stranger. Do you hear! Come away!

Ellida. I can never go with you after this.

The Stranger. You will not go!

Ellida (to Wangel). After this I can never leave you.

Wangel. Ellida——!

The Stranger. It is all over then.

Ellida. Yes, irrevocably.

The Stranger. I see there is something that is stronger than my will.

Ellida. Your will has no longer a feather's weight with me. For me you are a dead man, who has come back from the sea. But I am no longer in terror. And you fascinate me no more.

The Stranger. Good-bye, Ellida! (He vaults over the fence.) Henceforth you are nothing but a half-forgotten dream in my life.

(He goes out to the left.)

Wangel. How came this transformation?

Ellida. Oh, do you not understand that it came through liberation.

Wangel. And the unknown fascinates you no longer.

Ellida. No longer. I was free to choose it; and therefore I was able to reject it.
Wangel. And now you will come to me again, will you not, Ellida?

Ellida (throwing herself on his neck). Yes, Wangel—now I will come to you again. I can now, for now I come to you in freedom.

Wangel. Ellida! Ellida! Oh, to think that we two can now live for each other—

Ellida. —and for our memories. Yours as well as mine—

Wangel. Yes, can we not, dearest!

Ellida. —and for our two children, Wangel!

Wangel. Ours—! (Kisses her hands joyfully and quickly.) Oh, I thank you for that word more than I can tell!

(Arnholm, Annette, Lyngstrand, Frida, Ballested, and a number of townspeople and summer visitors come along the footpath.)

Frida. Just look, isn’t father gallant.

Ballested. It is summer time, miss.

Arnholm. The English steamer is under way.

Lyngstrand. The last trip of the season.

Ballested. "Soon will all the straits be ice-bound," as the poet says. It is sad, Mrs. Wangel. But I stick to what I’ve said. Human beings really can acclaim—acclimatise themselves.

Ellida. Yes, in freedom they can, Mr. Ballested.

(The great steamer glides noiselessly down the fiord. The music is heard closer inshore.)
HEDDA GABLER
A PLAY IN FOUR ACTS
BY
HENRIK IBSEN
1890
The pale, apparently cold beauty. Expects great things of life and the joy of life.
The man who has now finally won her, homely in appearance, but honourable, and a gifted, liberal-minded man of science.

Hedda: I have no gift for anything but being bored. That life should have nothing in the world to offer one. Supposing he were to go in for politics.
Brack. That is not in his line.
H. But perhaps I could get him into it.
Do you think he would ever get into the ministry.
Brack. For that he would have to be a very rich man.
H. Yes and then—I doubt if it would bring me any satisfaction in the long run.

Lövborg: I have led a rather wild life, they say. Now I have to make amends.
But I cannot renounce.

NB!

Brack had always thought that Hedda's short engagement to Tesman would come to nothing.
Hedda speaks of how she felt herself set aside, step by step, when her father was no longer in favour, when he retired and died without leaving anything.—It then came upon her, in her bitterness, that it was for his sake she had been made much of.—And then she was already between 25 and 26. In danger of becoming an old maid.

She thinks that in reality Tesman only feels a vain pride in having won her. His solicitude for her is the same as is shown for a thoroughbred horse or a valuable sporting dog.—This, however, does not offend her. She merely regards it as a fact.

Hedda says to Brack that she does not think Tesman can be called ridiculous. But in reality she finds him so. Later on she finds him pitiable as well.

Tesman: Could you not call me by my Christian name?

Hedda: No, indeed I couldn’t—unless they had given you some other name than the one you have.

Tesman puts Lövborg’s manuscript in his pocket so that it may not be lost. Afterwards it is Hedda who, by a casual remark, with tentative intention, gives him the idea of keeping it. Then he reads it. A new line of thought is revealed to him. But the strain of the situation increases. Hedda awakens his jealousy.

In the 3rd act one thing after another comes to light about Lövborg’s adventures in the course of the night. At last he comes himself, in quiet despair. “Where is the manuscript?” “Did I not leave it behind me here?” He does not know that he has done so. But after all, of what use is the manuscript to him now! He is writing of the “moral doctrine of the future”! When he has just been let out of the police cells!

Hedda’s despair is that there are doubtless so many chances of happiness in the world, but that she cannot discover them. It is the want of an object in life that torments her.

When Hedda beguiles T. into leading E. L. into ruin, it is done to test T.'s character.

It is in Hedda's presence that the irresistible craving for excess always comes over E. L.

Tesman cannot understand that E. L. could wish to base his future on injury to another.

Hedda. Do I hate T.? No, not at all. I only find him boring.

Brack. But nobody else thinks so.

Hedda. Neither is there any one but myself who is married to him.

Brack. ... not at all boring.

Hedda: Heavens, you always want me to express myself so correctly. Very well then. T. is not boring, but I am bored by living with him.

Hedda: ... had no prospects. Well, perhaps you would have liked to see me in a convent (home for unmarried ladies).

Hedda: ... then isn't it an honourable thing to profit by one's person? Don't actresses and others turn their advantages into profit? I had no other capital. Marriage—I thought it was like buying an annuity.

Hedda: Remember that I am the child of an old man—and a worn-out man too—or past his prime at any rate—Perhaps that has left its mark.

Brack: Upon my word, I believe you have begun to brood over problems.
Hedda: Well, what cannot one lapse into when one has gone and got married.

Miss R. (walking about the room). There. Now we can see all the finery. Yes, yes—it looks well, Berta. Flowers everywhere.

Berta. They were all sent in last night. So that they might keep fresh of course. But this a lady brought herself—just before you came, Miss.

Miss Rising. Yes, that is as it ought to be. When a young couple come home from their honeymoon—

FROM THE FIRST ACT

Miss Rising. Oh well—just at first. You must do as well as you can.

Berta. Most like she’ll be terrible grand in her ways.

Miss Rising. Well, you can’t wonder at that. Think of the sort of life she was accustomed to in her father’s time.

Berta. Yes, and if I only had to do with Master Axel, it would be easy enough.

Miss Rising. No, Axel is not difficult to please. If he only has what he has always been accustomed to, he’s satisfied. But by-the-bye, you mustn’t call him Master Axel any more. In future you must say Dr. Tesman.

Tesmen. Yes, you may be sure I have.

Miss Rising. And what do you think of it?

Tesman. I’m delighted. This is the very house Hedda wanted to live in. She said often and often, before we were engaged, that she would never care to live anywhere but in Secretary Falk's villa.

Miss Rising. And how lucky it was that this very house should be to let [for sale].

Tesman. Yes, you may be sure I was glad to hear of it. And Hedda too—when you wrote about it. And how comfortably you have arranged it all.

Miss Rising. So you really think that, dear Axel?

Tesman [(rising)]. Yes, it is simply splendid, I think.

Miss Rising. So do I. And Judge Brack says the same.

Tesman (looking round). [(feeling the chairs.)] Fancy—carved furniture! What I have always been wanting.

Miss Rising. Well, you see, now you will be made professor, and then you will at once have your own salary to depend upon——

Tesman. That is a matter of course. But in any case I am not yet appointed.

Miss Rising. Oh, you may be sure they will be quick about appointing you—as soon as they hear you are home again.

Tesman. Yes, that may be so. But just suppose that to-morrow I fall down in the street and lie there!

Miss Rising (laughing). Oh, there is no fear of that. A man who is born to make a noise in the world, he doesn't fall down in the street, you may be sure. The people who want to stand in your way, they fall. Holger Lövborg—his fall was the worst. And now he has to lie on the bed he has made for himself—poor [unfortunate] creature.

Tesman. Have you heard anything of him? Since I went away?
Miss Rising. Only that he has published a new book—

Tesman. What! Recently?

Miss Rising. Yes, but heaven knows whether it can be worth much? Ah—when your new book appears, Axel! That will be another story, won’t it!

Tesman. Yes, it won’t be long now, Auntie. For now it will be very easy for me—I feel that.

(Hedda, in a morning gown, enters by the corner door on the left.)

Miss Rising (going to meet her). Good morning, my dear Hedda! Good morning!

Hedda (holds out her hand). Good morning, dear Aunt! So early a call! That is kind of you.

Miss Rising. Well—has the bride slept well in her new home?

Hedda. Oh yes, thanks—passably. But of course one has always to accustom one’s self to new surroundings. Little by little. (Looking towards the left.) Oh—there the servant has gone and opened the veranda door, and let in a whole flood of sunshine.

Miss Rising (going towards the door). I will shut—

Hedda. No, no, not that. Tesman, please let down the Venetian blinds. That will give a softer light.

Tesman (goes to the door). All right—all right—There now, Hedda, now you have both fresh air and shade.

Hedda. Yes, fresh air we certainly must have, with all these stacks of flowers—. (At the table.) H’m,—we shall never get on with this servant.

Miss Rising. Not get on with Berta—!

Tesman. You don’t know how good Berta is.

Hedda. Well, but just look here. She has left her old bonnet lying about on a chair. Just fancy, if any one should come in and see it!

TESMAN. Why Hedda! That's Aunt Jane's bonnet!

HEDDA. What! No really—

MISS RISING (taking up the bonnet). And, what's more, it's not old, Mrs. Hedda.

HEDDA. No, of course—I can see that now.

MISS RISING (half in tears). And I only bought it in honour of your coming home.

HEDDA. But my dear good Miss [Aunt] Rising—

MISS RISING (tying on the bonnet). Yes, indeed I did.

HEDDA. No, but look here, Aunt Jane—

TESMAN. Hedda is a little short-sighted, you know, Auntie—

MISS RISING. Well, well, I'm sure it isn't worth saying anything about such a trifle.—But now I must see about getting back into town. And to Sister Rina, poor dear.—My parasol? Ah, here it is. For this is mine too. (Mutters.) Not Berta's. (Cordially to them both.) Well, good-bye, good-bye, dears! Good-bye, Axel! Heaven be thanked that everything is well with you.

HEDDA. Good-bye, Aunt Jane!

TESMAN. And mind you come and see us again soon.

MISS RISING. A thousand thanks, my boy. You may be sure I shall. (She goes out by the hall door.)

HEDDA. Do you think she was angry with me about that bonnet?

TESMAN. No, not angry. But I think she was a little annoyed.

HEDDA. Well, but what an idea, to pitch her bonnet about in the drawing-room? When she comes to call. How can she think of such a thing? No one does it.

TESMAN. Well you may be sure Aunt Jane won't do it again.
Hedda. In any case, I shall manage to make it up with her.

Tesman. Yes, my dear Hedda, please do that.

Hedda. I will ask a few good friends to spend the evening with us to-morrow. And then I can ask her at the same time.

Tesman. Yes, do, Hedda! For remember what she has been to me ever since I was a boy.

Hedda. And besides, it may be useful to keep her about us. For this servant—we evidently can't depend upon her.

Tesman. And there's one thing more you could do that would delight her heart.

Hedda. What is it?

Tesman. If you could only prevail on yourself—. For my sake, Hedda! If you could say du to her in future.

Hedda. No no, Tesman—you really mustn't ask that of me. I have told you so already. I shall call her "Aunt"—and you must be satisfied with that. I have never said du even to my own uncles and aunts.

Tesman. No no—if you're not used to it—. What are you looking at, Hedda?

Hedda. Oh, I'm only looking at my old pianoforte. It doesn't go at all well with all the other things.

Tesman. The first time I draw my salary, I'll see about exchanging it.

Hedda. No, no—no exchanging. I don't want to part with it. I would rather have it in my own little room, and then get another here in its place. When it's convenient, I mean.

Tesman. Yes, of course we could do that.

Hedda (takes up the bouquet from the piano). These flowers were not here last night when we arrived.

Tesman. Aunt Jane must have brought them.
HEDDA (examining the bouquet). A visiting-card (Takes it and reads.) “Shall return later in the day.”
—Can you guess whose card it is?
TESMAN. No. Whose?
HEDDA. Mrs. Elfstad’s. An old flame of yours.
TESMAN. Is it really? So Mrs. Elfstad is in town!
HEDDA. It’s odd that she should call upon us. I have scarcely seen her since we left school.
TESMAN. I haven’t seen her either for—heaven knows how long. I wonder how she can endure to live in such an out-of-the-way hole.
HEDDA (with sudden animation). But look here—isn’t it somewhere in those parts that he—that—Holger Lövborg is living?
TESMAN (smiling). Your old flame, Hedda? Yes, he is somewhere in that part of the country.

(BERTA enters by the hall door.)
BERTA. That lady, ma’am, that brought some flowers a little while ago, is here again. (Pointing.) The flowers you have in your hand, ma’am.
HEDDA. Ah, is she? Well, show her in at once.

(BERTA opens the door for MRS. ELFSTAD, and goes out herself.)
HEDDA (receives her warmly). How do you do, my dear Mrs. Elfstad? How delightful to see you again!
MRS. ELFSTAD (nervous, but self-controlled). Yes, it’s a very long time since we met.
TESMAN (gives her his hand). And we too.
[Thanks, thanks, I hardly knew whether I might call.]
HEDDA. And a thousand thanks for these lovely flowers——

TESMAN. His book? Then he has really published a new book?
MRS. Elfsted. Yes, a big book called "Sociology." Haven't you heard of it, Mr. Tesman?

Tesman. No, how should I have heard of it?

Hedda. You see, we've been roving about all over the place——

Tesman. My aunt did say something about it just now—— When did the book come out?

MRS. Elfsted. About a fortnight ago. And since it has sold so well, and been so much read—and made such a sensation——

Hedda. Has it indeed?

Tesman. It must be something he has had lying by since his better days.

Mrs. Elfsted. Here it is.

(She hands him a slip of paper.)

Tesman. Good, good. Then I'll go in——

Hedda. Be sure you write him a cordial letter. And a good long one too.

Tesman. Yes, I will.

MRS. Elfsted. But please, please don't say anything about me!

Tesman. No, no—if you don't want me to.

[H. Look there. Take those with you.

T. What are they?

H. Your slippers.

T. Oh yes, I forgot.]

(He goes out by the door in the corner on the right.)

Hedda. No, that's clear.

MRS. Elfsted. And then my husband sometimes made use of him in his office.—You see, Lövborg was to be had for—for a small salary.
HEDDA. Did Holger Lövborg have to sit writing in an office!

MRS. ELFSTED. Chiefly when my husband was away on official business.

HEDDA. And your husband—perhaps he is often away from home?

MRS. ELFSTED. Yes. Being sheriff, you know, he has to travel about a good deal in his district.

HEDDA (leaning towards her, with both hands on her shoulder). Thea—my poor, sweet Thea—now you must tell me everything—exactly as it stands.

MRS. ELFSTED. Well then, you must question me. Question me about anything you please! And I will try to answer.

HEDDA. What sort of a man is your husband, Thea?

MRS. ELFSTED. What sort of a man?

HEDDA. Well, I mean—you know—in everyday life. Is he kind to you?

MRS. ELFSTED. I am sure he means well in everything. And no doubt everyone else thinks so too. I mean, the few people who visit us.

HEDDA. Then you don’t see much society.

MRS. ELFSTED. No.

HEDDA. But can you endure it, year after year?

MRS. ELFSTED. No, I cannot. Nor can I endure that any more—after this.

HEDDA. Not that, you say? Then is there something else?

MRS. ELFSTED. Everything!

HEDDA. Your husband must be much, much older than you. There is at least twenty years’ difference between you, is there not?

MRS. ELFSTED. Yes, that is true, too. Everything about him is repellent to me! We have not a thought in common! We have never had a single point of sympathy—he and I.

Hedda. But is he not fond of you all the same? At heart? In his own way?

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh no—please don’t think that. He regards me simply as a useful property. And then it doesn’t cost much to keep me. I am not expensive.

Hedda. That is stupid of you.

Mrs. Elfsted shakes her head. It cannot be otherwise—not with him.

Hedda. No, no—if you can’t make him really care for you——.

Mrs. Elfsted. He can’t care for any one but himself—and perhaps a little for the children.

Hedda. And for Holger Lövborg, Thea.

Mrs. Elfsted looking at her. For Holger Lövborg! What puts that into your head?

Hedda. Well, my dear—when he lets you go—. When he sends you after him all the way to town.

Mrs. Elfsted smiling nervously. Oh, of course. Yes, yes— (Vehemently, but not loudly.) No—I may just as well make a clean breast of it! I can’t sit here telling lies any longer. For it must all come out in any case.

Hedda. Lies! Why, dear Thea——!

Mrs. Elfsted. Well, to make a long story short—. My husband did not know that I was coming.

Hedda. What! Your husband didn’t know it!

Mrs. Elfsted. No, of course not. For that matter, he was away from home himself—he was travelling. I could bear it no longer. I couldn’t indeed—so utterly alone as I should have been in future.

Hedda. Well? And then?
Mrs. Elfsted. So I put together a few little things—what I needed most—as quietly as possible. And then I left the house.

Hedda. Without a word?

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes—and took the steamer first. And then the train to town.

Hedda. Why, my dear, good Thea—!

Mrs. Elfsted. What else could I possibly do?

Hedda. But what do you think your husband will say when you go home again?

Mrs. Elfsted (looks at her). Back to him?

Hedda. Of course.

Mrs. Elfsted (rises and moves about the room). I shall never go back to him again.

Hedda (turns on the sofa and follows her with her eyes). Then you have—left house and home—for good and all? Left everything?

Mrs. Elfsted. A thing of that sort cannot be undone.

Hedda (rises from the sofa and goes towards her). But, Thea, did you think well over this?

Mrs. Elfsted. I thought over nothing. I only did what I thought I had to do.

Hedda. And what are your plans now? What do you think of doing?

Mrs. Elfsted. I don't know yet. I only know this, that I must live where he is—if I am to live at all.

Hedda. Sit down a moment—then you will be calmer. (They seat themselves at the table.) How did this—this understanding—between you and Holger Lövborg come about?

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, I suppose it grew up gradually. As I saw that I had gained a sort of influence over him.

Hedda. So you had that?
Mrs. Elfsted. He gave up his bad habits. Not because I asked him to, for I never dared do that. But of course he saw that they were repulsive to me; and so he dropped everything of that sort.

Hedda (with slight mockery). Then you have reclaimed him—as the saying goes.

Mrs. Elfsted. And he has made a real human being of me—taught me to think, and to understand so many things.

Hedda. Did he give you lessons too, then?

Mrs. Elfsted. No, not exactly lessons. But he talked to me—talked about such an infinity of things.

Hedda. Scientific things, I suppose.

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, that sort of thing. Why do you smile? Remember,—up there I was not situated as you are here. You have your husband to explain so much to you.

Hedda (dryly). Yes, I have. But do you think it amusing to sit and listen to explanations?

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, indeed I do. Don’t you think so too?

Hedda. No, most certainly I don’t. I think it terribly boring. (Glances towards Tesman’s door.) But that’s between ourselves, of course.

Mrs. Elfsted. Everything must be between ourselves. For heaven’s sake—all that I’ve been telling you just now.

Hedda. Oh, I suppose Tesman may——

Mrs. Elfsted (struggling with herself). Hedda—there is—one thing more.

Hedda. And what is that?

Mrs. Elfsted. I don’t feel at all sure what will be the end of it—between Holger Lövborg and me. Whether it will be nothing but close friendship—on his side.
HEDDA. What? Are you not sure of him, then?

MRS. ELFSTED. Yes, I think I ought to be now. Now that I have left house and home for his sake. But—but—oh, Hedda, there is some one that stands between us.

HEDDA. What do you mean by that?

MRS. ELFSTED. Some one who has hurt him and injured him so profoundly—. But whom I don't believe he can ever forget in spite of that.

HEDDA (rises slowly, rests her hands on the table and fixes her eyes upon her). Who is it you mean?

MRS. ELFSTED. Yourself, Hedda.

HEDDA. Can this be—! Hush! (Glances towards TESMAN'S door.) Hush, he's coming! (Whispers.) For God's sake, Thea—let all this be between ourselves!

(AXEL TESMAN, with a letter in his hand, comes from his room.)

TESMAN. There now; the letter is finished.

HEDDA. That's right.. Mrs. Elfsted and I were thinking of going out.

TESMAN. Good. Then perhaps you will post this when you go.

HEDDA (takes the letter). I will tell the maid to.

TESMAN. Yes, of course; that is what I meant.

(BERTA enters from the hall.)

BERTA. Judge Brack wishes to know if Mrs. Tesman will receive him.

HEDDA. Yes, ask Judge Brack to come in. And look here—put this letter in the post.

BERTA (taking the letter). Yes, ma'am.

(She opens the door for Judge Brack and goes out herself.)

BRACK. May one venture to call so early in the day?

HEDDA. Of course you may.
TESMAN. Welcome at any time. (Introducing him.)
Mrs. Elfsted—Judge Brack.

BRACK. Ah, delighted—

HEDDA. It's nice to see you by daylight, Judge.

BRACK. And I think it's nice to see you and your husband in your home. Where I have been arranging the empty rooms and putting them into shape.

TESMAN. I can't thank you sufficiently.—

BRACK. Oh, pray don't—

HEDDA. Yes, you are a friend indeed—

BRACK. And is Mrs. Hedda tolerably satisfied?

HEDDA. Yes, indeed I am. Of course—there will have to be a little re-arrangement here and there.

BRACK. Oh, we only arranged things just for the present.

HEDDA. And one or two things are still wanting.

We shall have to buy some additional trifles.

BRACK. Indeed!

HEDDA (laughing). Don't be alarmed! You shall not be troubled with them. I shall see to them myself.

BRACK. Oh, I didn't mean that. (To TESMAN.)
By-the-bye, I really called on business—

TESMAN. Indeed? Business—?

HEDDA. That's good of you! You want to turn me out.

BRACK. I!

HEDDA. Yes, aren't you threatening to talk about business?—Come along, Thea! (To TESMAN.) I shall not be out long.

TESMAN. Just as you please, dear.

HEDDA (to BRACK). Au revoir, then—when you have done your business.

BRACK. Au revoir, Mrs. Hedda.

(HEDDA and MRS ELFSTED go out by the hall door.)
TESMAN. There. Now we can have a talk. Won’t you sit down?

BRACK (seats himself beside the table). Thanks, for a moment.

TESMAN (seating himself). Then it’s business——?

BRACK. Yes, in a way.

TESMAN. I understand. It’s the serious part of the frolic that is coming now.

TESMAN. It was Holger Lövborg we were talking about.

HEDDA (glancing at him rapidly). Ah——!

TESMAN. And I really can’t see what is to become of him.

BRACK. Perhaps I can give you some information on that point.

TESMAN. Indeed!

BRACK. You must not forget that he comes of a powerful family.

TESMAN. He can’t count upon those people.

BRACK. Are you so sure of that?

TESMAN. I know that among themselves he is known as the stain on the family.

BRACK. At one time they called him the hope of the family.

TESMAN. At one time—yes. But he has put an end to all that.

HEDDA. He has recovered himself, though.

BRACK. And then this book that he has published——

TESMAN. Well well, I hope to goodness they may find something for him to do. I have just written to him. Asked him to come to us to-morrow evening.
HEDDA. You come too, Judge Brack. We will have an amusing time.

BRACK. My dear Mr. Tesman—and you too, Mrs. Hedda—I think I ought not to keep you in the dark about something that—that—

TESMAN. That concerns Holger?

BRACK. Both you and him.

TESMAN. Well, my dear Judge, out with it!

BRACK. You must be prepared to find your appointment deferred longer than you desired or expected.

TESMAN. What? Is there some hitch?

BRACK. The nomination may perhaps be made conditional on the result of a competition—

TESMAN. Competition!

HEDDA. With whom? Ah——!

TESMAN. Surely not——?

BRACK (rises). Yes, precisely—Holger Lövborg.

TESMAN (springs up). No, no—it's quite inconceivable! Quite impossible!

BRACK. Perhaps that is what it may come to, all the same.

TESMAN. But that would be the most shameful injustice towards me. They had as good as promised me the appointment!

BRACK. Well, and no doubt you will get it in the end; only after a contest.

HEDDA. Fancy——! There will be a sort of sporting interest in that.

TESMAN. Why, Hedda, how can you be so indifferent about it!

HEDDA. I am not at all indifferent. I am most eager to see who wins.

BRACK. In any case, Mrs. Hedda, it is best that you should know the position, before you—before you set about the little purchases that you were threatening just now.

Hedda. This can make no difference.

Brack. Indeed. Then I have no more to say. Good-bye for the present.

Hedda. Good-bye, Judge; and be sure you call tomorrow!

Brack. Many thanks. Good-bye, good-bye.

Tesman (accompanying him to the door). Good-bye, Judge!

(Judge Brack goes out through the hall.)

Tesman. Well, Hedda—you and I must have a serious talk.

Hedda. Not now, Tesman. I assure you, I haven’t time.

Tesman. No time!

Hedda. No. I must go and change my dress before lunch.

(She goes towards the door on the left.)

Tesman. But you take this as if it didn’t matter at all.

Hedda (turns in the doorway). Why should I not? You are so fond of saying that the strongest always wins.

(She goes out.)

Tesman (grasps the back of a chair and gazes uneasily before him). The strongest, yes——

---

SECOND ACT

The room at the Tesmans’ as in the First Act, except that the piano has been removed, and an elegant little writing-table and an étagère put in its place. Some of the bouquets have been removed from the table and placed in the inner room. It is afternoon.
Hedda, dressed in a tasteful afternoon gown, is alone in the room. She stands by the open door of the veranda, loading a revolver. The other lies in an open case on a chair by her side.

Hedda (looks down the garden and calls). So you are here again, Judge!

Judge Brack (is heard calling from below). As you see, Mrs. Hedda!

Hedda (raises the revolver and points). Now I'll shoot you, Judge Brack.

Judge Brack (calling unseen). No, no, no! Don't stand aiming at me!

Hedda (fires). Bang!

Brack (outside). Are you out of your senses——!

Hedda. Did I hit you?

Brack (still outside). I wish you would let these pranks alone!

Hedda (lays the revolver in the case). Come in then, Judge.

(Judge Brack enters by the door of the veranda.)

Brack. What the deuce are you shooting at?

Hedda. Thrushes.

Brack. But the thrushes haven't come yet.

Hedda. Oh, then I'm firing in the air.

Brack. What is the good of that?

Hedda. Then what in heaven's name would you have me do with myself?

Brack. Have you had no visitors?

Hedda (closing the door of the veranda). Not one. I suppose all our set are still out of town. I have to be content with their flowers and visiting-cards.

Brack. And is Tesman not at home either?

Hedda. No, he rushed out of the house as soon as I took up the pistol-case.
Brack. Really, Mrs. Hedda!
Hedda. Oh, you mustn’t take it so literally. Though, for that matter, he is almost as much afraid of these things as you are.

(She takes the case and locks it up in a drawer of the writing-table.)

Brack (standing behind her, still with his overcoat on his arm and his hat in his hand). So he’s not at home.
Hedda. No—he didn’t expect you so early. And then it struck him that he had to go into town and get some new books.

Brack. Of course. It was stupid of me not to have thought of that before.
Hedda (turning her head to look at him). Why stupid?
Brack. Because if I had thought of it I should have come—a little—earlier.
Hedda (puts the key of the writing-table in her pocket and walks across the room). Then you would have found no one to receive you; for I have been in my room changing my dress ever since lunch.

Brack. And is there no sort of a little chink that we could talk through?
Hedda. Not for you in any case, my good Judge.—But let us sit down and wait. Tesman is not likely to be back for some time yet.

Brack. Yes and no. To speak frankly, I never imagined that engagement would lead to anything.
Hedda (smiling). The wish was father to the thought.
Brack (laughs). Yes, yes, yes, Mrs. Hedda, so they say.

Hedda (jestingly). Oh, I assure you I have never cherished any illusions with respect to you.
Brack. All I require is a pleasant and intimate interior, where I can be of assistance in every possible way—

Hedda (raising her forefinger). Not with money though!

Brack. No, that would at once destroy the understanding. That is why, you see, I prefer those houses where there is no question of anything of that sort, and where I am free to come and go as a friend—

Hedda. Of the mistress of the house?

Brack (bows gallantly). Of the mistress first of all, of course. But of the master too, in the second place. Such a triangular friendship—if I may call it so—is really a great convenience for all parties, let me tell you.

Tesman. I think it shows quite remarkable soundness of judgment. He never wrote like that before. But haven't you been down into the garden and had a look round, Hedda? Eh?

Hedda. No, I have only been out on the veranda a little.

Tesman. Ah, isn't the view lovely? Over the fiord and the islands? (Goes nearer to her.) Well, isn't it nice to find yourself established as mistress of the house it had always been your dream to live in?

Hedda. Yes, wasn't it a strange piece of luck?

Tesman (putting the books together). Now I shall take all these into my study. I'm longing to—! And then I must change my clothes. (To Brack.) I suppose we needn't start just yet?

Brack. Oh, dear no—there is not the slightest hurry.

Tesman. Well then, I can take my time. (Is going with his books towards the inner room, but stops and turns in the doorway.) By-the-bye, Hedda—I looked in on the aunts.

HEDDA (by the door of the veranda). Yes, I’ve no doubt you did.

TESMAN. Aunt Jane is not coming to-day.

HEDDA (turns towards him). Not coming? Is it that affair of the bonnet that keeps her away?

TESMAN. Oh, not at all. How could you think such a thing? But Aunt Rina is very ill now.

HEDDA. She always is.

TESMAN. Yes, but to-day she was much worse.

HEDDA. Oh, then it’s only natural that her sister should remain with her. I must bear my disappointment.

TESMAN (a little disappointed). Of course this does not affect you so nearly. But I thought I would tell you, all the same.

(He goes through the inner room and out to the right.)

HEDDA (goes over towards the stove). Oh, those everlasting aunts!

BRACK. What bonnet were you talking about?

HEDDA. Oh, it was a little episode with Miss Rysing. She has such extraordinary manners at times. This morning she had pitched her bonnet down here in the drawing-room. (Looks at him and smiles.) And I pretended to think it was the servant’s.

BRACK (shaking his head in disapproval). Now my dear Mrs. Hedda, how could you do such a thing? To that excellent old lady, too!

HEDDA (moving nervously about). Well, you see—these impulses come over me all of a sudden; and I cannot resist them. And then to suffer torments of remorse—there seems to be a kind of pleasure in it. A real—refinement of pleasure. Oh, I don't know how to explain it.

(She has thrown herself into the easy-chair by the stove.)

Brack (behind the easy-chair). You are not really happy—that is at the bottom of it.

Hedda (looking before her). I know of no reason why I should be—happy. Perhaps you can give me one?

Brack. Well—amongst other things, because you have got exactly the home you had set your heart on.

Hedda (looks up at him and laughs). Do you believe in that legend?

Brack. Is there nothing in it, then?

Hedda. Oh yes, there is something in it. I'll tell you the story.

Brack. Well?

Hedda. Some time ago, when there were evening parties at the Consul General's country house, Tesman used often to contrive to see me home——

Brack. Yes, yes, he was very attentive. I remember that.

Hedda. And you always had one of the younger ladies to look after.

Brack. And then I had to go quite a different way——

Hedda. That's true. I know you were going a different way last summer.

Brack (laughing). Oh fie, Mrs. Hedda! Well, then——Tesman——?

Hedda. Well, it happened one evening. We were just passing here. And Tesman was writhing in the agony of having to find conversation, poor fellow. So I took pity on him——

Brack (smiles doubtfully). You took pity?

Hedda. Yes, I really did. And so—to help him out of his torment—I happened to say, in pure thoughtlessness, that I should like to live in this villa. And, thank heaven—that loosened his tongue.

Brack. No more than that?
Hedda. Not that evening.
Brack. But afterwards?
Hedda. Yes, my thoughtlessness had consequences, my dear Judge.

Brack. Unfortunately that too often happens, Mrs. Hedda.

Hedda. Thanks! But all through the winter, whenever we met, he sat down and talked about this blessèd villa. How nice it must be to live in Secretary Falk's villa.

Brack. But then you contradicted him, of course? As you always do.

Hedda. No, I said just the same as he. For Tesman is not one of the men that it is any pleasure to contradict.

Brack. And you really cared not a rap about it all the time?

Hedda. No, heaven knows I didn't.

Brack. But now? Now that it has been made so homelike for you!

Hedda. Uh, the rooms all seem to smell of lavender and dried rose-leaves.—But perhaps it's Aunt Jane that has brought that scent with her.

(George Tesman, dressed in black, with his gloves and hat in his hand, enters from the right through the inner room.)

Tesman. No answer from Lövborg, Hedda? Eh?
Hedda. No. I don't suppose he'll send any answer. He'll come himself.

Tesman (to Brack). Well then, I must wait for him as long as possible.

Brack. We have plenty of time yet. None of my guests will arrive before seven or half-past.

Tesman. Well then, that's all right.

(He places his hat and gloves on a chair on the right.)

Hedda (placing Brack's hat and overcoat on the same chair). And at the worst Mr. Lövborg can remain here with me.

Brack (offering to take his things). Oh, allow me.—What do you mean by "At the worst"?

Hedda. That he won't go with you and Tesman.

Tesman (looks dubiously at her). But, Hedda dear—do you think it would quite do? Remember, Auntie can't come.

Hedda. No, but Mrs. Elfsted is coming. We three can have a cup of tea together.

Brack. Yes, that would perhaps be the safest plan for him.

Hedda (rather sharply). Why so?

Brack. You were saying this morning that you knew what my bachelor parties were like.

(Berta appears at the hall door.)

Berta. There's a gentleman asking if you are at home, ma'am—

Hedda. Well, show him in.

(Berta goes out.)

Tesman (softly). Hedda—you'll see, this is he.

(Eilert Lövborg enters from the hall. He is slim and lean; of the same age as Tesman, but looks older and somewhat worn out. His hair and beard are of a blackish brown, his face long, delicately shaped and pale, but with spots of colour on the cheek-bones. He is dressed in a well-cut black visiting-suit, quite new, the frock-coat rather long. He has light brown gloves and a silk hat. He carries under his left arm a small portfolio with papers in it. He stops near the door and makes a slight bow, seeming somewhat embarrassed.)

TESMAN (goes up to him and gives him his hand). My dear Lövborg! Well, so we see each other again at last!

EILERT LöVBORG (speaks in a subdued voice). Thanks for your letter, Tesman. (Approaching HEDDA.) May I shake hands with you too, Mrs. Tesman?

HEDDA (giving him her hand). I am glad to see you. (Introducing him with a motion of her hand.) I don’t know whether you two gentlemen——?

lövborg (bowing slightly). Judge Brack, I think.

brack (bows). Oh yes—we have often met.

tesman (with his hand on lövborg’s shoulder). Well, now you must make yourself at home! (Bringing him further forward.) So I hear you are going to settle in town again.

lövborg. Yes, I am.

tesman. Quite right, quite right. Let me tell you, I have got hold of your new book.

lövborg (indifferently). Oh, that one.

tesman. But I haven’t had time to read it yet.

lövborg. Oh, my dear fellow, you may spare yourself the trouble.

tesman. Why so?

lövborg. Why, because there is very little in it.

tesman. Very little in it!

brack. But, good gracious, it has been very much praised, I hear.
Lövborg. Just so. That was what I wanted. What served my purpose. So I put nothing into the book but what every one would agree to.

Brack. Very wise of you.

Tesman. Well but, my dear——

Lövborg. I had to win myself a position again—to make an absolutely fresh start.

Tesman (a little embarrassed). Yes, yes, I suppose you had to do that.

Lövborg (smiling, lays down his hat, and taps the portfolio, which he holds out). But look here—when this one appears—! For this—this is the real book. The one with something in it.

Tesman. Indeed? And what is it?

Lövborg. It is the continuation.

Tesman (looks dubiously at him). The continuation? Of what?

Lövborg. Of the book.

Tesman. Of the new book——?

Lövborg. Yes, of course.

Tesman. But, my dear fellow—does it not come down to our own days?

Lövborg. Certainly it does; and this one deals with the future.

Tesman. But, my dear Lövborg—we know nothing of the future. And so there is nothing to be said about it.

Lövborg (smiling). Oh yes, perhaps there is a thing or two to be said about it all the same.

Brack. But there can't possibly be anything—really scientific.

Lövborg. I don't trouble myself about that either. (To Tesman, showing him the papers). Look here—you see. I have divided it into two sections. The first section deals with "The civilising forces of the future."
And here is the second—(running through the pages towards the end)—here—forecasting the probable line of development.

TESMAN. How odd now. (Shakes his head.) I should never have thought of writing anything of that sort.

HEDDA (at the glass door, drumming on the pane). H'm! I dare say not.

LÖVBORG (shutting up the portfolio). I brought it with me, thinking I might read you a little of it this evening.

TESMAN. That was very good of you, Lövborg. But this evening—? (Looking at Brack.) I don’t quite see how we could manage it——

LÖVBORG. Well then, some other time. There is no hurry at all.

BRACK. I must tell you, Mr. Lövborg—there is a little gathering at my house this evening. In honour of Tesman, you understand. A few friends are coming.

LÖVBORG (looking for his hat). Oh—then I won’t detain you——

TESMAN. No, no, there’s time enough.

BRACK. No, but listen. Will you not do me the favour of joining us?

LÖVBORG (with slight uneasiness). I? No, no! Thank you very much.

BRACK. Oh, nonsense—do! We shall be quite a select little circle. And I assure you we shall have a "lively time," as Mrs. Hed—as Mrs. Tesman says.

LÖVBORG. Yes, I can believe that. But nevertheless——

BRACK. And then you might bring your manuscript with you, and read it to Tesman there. I could give you a room to yourselves.

TESMAN. Yes, why shouldn’t you?

HEDDA (interposing). But, Tesman, if Mr. Lövborg would really rather not! I am sure Mr. Lövborg is much more inclined to remain here and have supper with me.

LÖVBORG (with a rapid look at her). With you, Mrs. Tesman!

HEDDA. And with Mrs. Elfsted—

LÖVBORG. Ah—!

HEDDA. —for she has promised to come this evening. So you see you are almost bound to remain, Mr. Lövborg, or she will have no one to see her home.

LÖVBORG. That's true. Many thanks, Mrs. Tesman—in that case I shall be very glad to remain.

HEDDA. Then I have one or two orders to give—

(She goes to the hall door and rings. BERTA enters. HEDDA talks to her in a whisper, and points towards the inner room. BERTA nods and goes out again.)

TESMAN (at the same time, to EILERT LÖVBORG). Tell me, Lövborg—is it this new subject—the future—that you are going to lecture about?

LÖVBORG. Yes.

TESMAN. I have heard that you are thinking of delivering a course of lectures this autumn.

LÖVBORG. That is my intention. I hope you won't take it ill, Tesman.

TESMAN. Take it ill! No, not in the least.

LÖVBORG. You see, I can quite understand that it must be disagreeable to you—

TESMAN. Oh, I can't expect you, out of consideration for me, to—

BRACK. And then it is not the first time in your lives that you two friends have met as rivals—

BRACK. In generous, friendly contest, of course.
For prize medals and for scholarships and for—many other things.

TESMAN. Yes, in those days you carried off many a victory, my dear Lövborg.

LÖVBORG. Oh yes—at first. But latterly—. I have fallen a long way behind, Tesman.

HEDDA. But now you can catch him up again, Mr. Lövborg.

LÖVBORG. I hope to be able to.

TESMAN (in suspense). To win?

LÖVBORG. Yes. If not, I should not engage in a contest——

BRACK. Oh, when a man has such good backing as you have——

LÖVBORG. Backing? Aha—you refer to those relatives of mine, who run about and give themselves so much trouble——

BRACK. Ah, then you have heard of it at any rate?

LÖVBORG. Yes, I was told about it to-day. But I will have nothing to do with those people. I decline to see them!

TESMAN. But, my dear Lövborg——

HEDDA. Will you reject all help?

LÖVBORG. Yes, Mrs. Tesman, I will.

BRACK. But why in the world—! Why do you do that?

LÖVBORG. Because I wish to owe the victory to myself.

To my own powers.

TESMAN. And—and do you think you will win?

LÖVBORG. Yes, I am sure of it.

TESMAN. And that—it will be you who—who will get the appointment?

LÖVBORG (looks at him in astonishment). Appointment?—Is it that professorship you are talking about?

TESMAN. Yes, of course.
Lövborg. Is that what you think I am competing with you for?

Tesman. But, bless my soul, what else should it be? If it isn't the appointment, why——

Lövborg. I wouldn't accept that appointment at any price. Such a position is not the thing for me. I have found that out while I was in the country.

Brack. Then it is only the honour and glory you will compete for?

Lövborg (softly, with diffidence). Honour and glory mean much to a man with—well—with a past like mine.

Tesman (pressing his hands). Yes, yes, Lövborg, I can quite understand. Thanks—now I recognise your old self. (Joyfully, to Hedda.) Well, what do you say to that! Only the honour and glory! He is not going to stand in our way.

Hedda (curtly, looking at him). Our way? Pray leave me out of the question.

(She goes up towards the door of the inner room, where Berta is placing a tray with decanters and glasses on the table. Hedda nods approval, and comes forward again. Berta goes out on the right of the inner room.)

Tesman (at the same time). And you, Judge—what do you say?

Brack. Well, I say that honour and glory are fine things. And an old friendship—is an exceedingly lasting bond——

Tesman. Yes, certainly it is; but all the same——

Lövborg. What I can't understand is that you could think so ill of me.

Tesman. Yes, think of my being able to do that!

Hedda (looking at Tesman and smiling). You [stand there] look[-ing] as if you were thunderstruck.
Tesman. Yes, so I am——

Brack. Don't you see, Mrs. Tesman, a thunderstorm has just passed over?

Tesman. But tell me, Lövborg—what are you thinking of doing?

Lövborg. I am going to live as a free man.

Brack. A pleasant occupation. But it doesn't bring in much.

Lövborg. I don't want much either. Not now.

Tesman. No, and besides—when one is alone. With no one but one's self to look after. I should think you would get on quite well.

Hedda (pointing towards the inner room). Will you not [go in and] take a glass of iced punch, gentlemen?

Brack (looking at his watch). A stirrup-cup? Yes, it wouldn't come amiss.

Tesman. A capital idea, Hedda! A capital idea! Now that the weight has been lifted——

Hedda. Won't you go in? You too, Mr. Lövborg.

Lövborg (with a gesture of refusal). No, thank you. Nothing for me!

Tesman. Oh yes, do! Come and join us.

Lövborg. No, no, many thanks. Nothing at all.

Brack. Why bless me—iced punch is surely not poison.

Lövborg. No, perhaps not for every one.

Hedda. I will keep Mr. Lövborg company in the meantime.

Tesman. Yes, yes, Hedda dear—do.

(He and Brack go into the inner room, seat themselves at the table, drink punch, smoke cigars, and chat during what follows. Eilert Lövborg remains standing beside the stove. Hedda goes to the writing-table.)
Hedda (turns her head and says in a rather loud voice): Now I will show you some photographs, Mr. Lövborg. You know Tesman and I made a tour in the Tyrol on our way home?

(She brings an album, and places it on the table beside the sofa, in the further corner of which she seats herself. Lövborg approaches, stops, and looks at her. Then he takes a chair and seats himself to her left, with his back towards the inner room.)

Hedda (opening the album). Do you see this range of mountains? It's the Ortler group. Tesman has written the name underneath. Here it is: "The Ortler group near Meran."

Lövborg (who has never taken his eyes off her, says softly and slowly:) Hedda—Gabler!

Hedda (glances hastily at him, and says softly:) Ah!—Hush!

Lövborg (repeats softly, in a pained voice:) Hedda Gabler!

Hedda (looking at the album). That was my name in the old days—when we knew each other.

Lövborg. And now—as long as I live—I must teach myself to say Mrs.—Tesman—

Hedda (still turning over the pages). Yes. And I think you ought to practise in time. The sooner the better, I should say.

Lövborg. Married. Married to another—!

Hedda. Yes—so the world goes.

Lövborg. Oh, Hedda—Hedda—how could you do it!

Hedda (looks sharply at him). What! I can't allow this!

Lövborg. What?

(Tesman comes from the inner room and goes towards the sofa.)
HEDDA (calmly, in her usual voice). And this, Mr. Lövborg—is a view from the Val d'Ampezzo. Look at these peaks. (Looks up at Tesman.) What's the name of these curious peaks?

TESMAN (looking more closely). Those? Oh, those are the Dolomites.

HEDDA. Yes, that's it.—Those are the Dolomites, Mr. Lövborg.

TESMAN (to HEDDA). I only wanted to ask whether I shouldn't bring you a little punch? Or wine, perhaps? For yourself at any rate.

HEDDA. Yes, please. And a few biscuits.

TESMAN. No cigarettes?

HEDDA. No [, many thanks].

TESMAN. Very well.

(He goes into the inner room and out to the right. Brack sits in the inner room, and keeps an eye from time to time on Hedda and Lövborg. Soon after, Tesman again appears and seats himself at the table with Brack.)

LÖVBORG (softly, as before). Answer me, Hedda—how could you go and do this?

HEDDA (apparently absorbed in the album). If you say du to me I won't talk to you.

LÖVBORG. May I not say du even when we are alone?

HEDDA. No. You may think it; but you mustn't say it.

LÖVBORG. Why not—exactly?

HEDDA. Because I should look upon it as a sort of unfaithfulness towards Tesman. And I won't hear of that.

LÖVBORG. Is it really possible that such a trifle offends your love for him?
Hedda (glances at him and smiles). Love? What an idea!

Lövborg. I don't understand you, Hedda.

Hedda. Do you believe that anything so wonderful exists?

Lövborg. As love?

Hedda. Yes. For I don't. I believe it's only something that people have invented. And that they go about discussing.

(In the meantime Berta has entered from the right in the inner room, bringing a smaller tray with punch, wine and biscuits, which she places on the table of the inner room, going out again on the same side. Tesman takes up the tray and brings it into the drawing-room.)

Tesman. Here you are! Isn't this tempting?

Hedda. Why do you bring it yourself?

Tesman (filling the glasses). Because I think it's fun to wait upon you, Hedda.

Hedda. But you have poured out two glasses. Mr. Lövborg said he wouldn't have any——

Tesman. Mrs. Elfsted will soon be here, won't she?

Hedda. Yes, by-the-bye—Mrs. Elfsted——!

Tesman. Had you forgotten her?

Hedda. Oh, we were so absorbed in these photographs.—Tesman—what is the name of this little village?

Tesman (goes round to her). Which? Let me see.—Oh, that's Gossensass, by the Brenner Pass. It was there we stayed more than a day——

Hedda. Yes, and met that lively party.

Tesman. Yes, of course it was there.

(He returns to the inner room and sits beside Brack.)

Lövborg. Not in our friendship either?

Hedda. What?
LOVBORG. Was there no love in it? Not a single spark—not a tinge of love in the whole of it?

HEDDA. I wonder?

LOVBORG. None at all on your side then?

HEDDA. To me it seems as though we were two good comrades—two intimate friends. You especially were frankness itself.

LOVBORG. I fear I was too frank. But it was you that made me so. Oh, Hedda—why should not that, at any rate, have continued, as it was then!

HEDDA. The fault was yours that it could not. Yours—and that of the life you were leading.

LOVBORG. Yes, I know. I know that well enough.

HEDDA (looking at him). I think there was something beautiful—something almost fascinating—in—that secret intimacy which no living creature so much as dreamed of.

LOVBORG. Yes, yes, Hedda! Was there not? (Pauses for a moment and looks before him.) When I used to come to your father's in the afternoon—and the General sat over at the window reading his papers—with his back towards us——

HEDDA. And you and I on the corner sofa——

LOVBORG. With the illustrated magazines, Hedda——

HEDDA. Just as we are now with this album.

LOVBORG. Yes, and when I made my confessions to you—told you about myself, things that at that time no one else knew. Told you of my escapades—my days and nights of devilment.—Oh, Hedda—what was the power in you that drove me to confess these things?

HEDDA (starts, and looks at him). Do you think it was any power in me?

LOVBORG. How else can I explain it? And all those—roundabout questions—you used to put to me——
HEDDA. Which you understood so particularly well—

LÖVBORG. But how could you sit and question me like that? Question me about—all that sort of thing?

HEDDA. And how could you answer, Mr. Lövborg—?

LÖVBORG. Well, a man—. But tell me now, Hedda—was there not love at the bottom of this? On your side? Was it not all because you felt as though you might purge my stains away—if I made you my confessor? Was it not so?

HEDDA. No, not quite.

LÖVBORG. But what was your motive, then?

HEDDA (with slight hesitation). Do you think it so strange that a lady—when it can be done—without any one knowing—

LÖVBORG. Well?

HEDDA. —should be glad to have a peep, now and then, into a world which—

LÖVBORG. Which?

HEDDA. —which she is forbidden to know anything about? [To me you were like a messenger from a forbidden country.]

LÖVBORG (looking at her). So that was it?

HEDDA. Partly. Partly—I almost think.

LÖVBORG. But why could not things go on between us? As they were then? Why did you break it all off so suddenly?

HEDDA. Do you need to be told that?

LÖVBORG. Certainly. Tell me!

HEDDA. Have you forgotten your abominable behaviour—on a certain occasion? The last time we were alone.
Lövborg. Oh, don't remind me of that! But I have an impression that it was not that which caused the rupture.

Hedda. No, not exactly. But from such a person as you were then, I might expect—I was going to say—anything.

Lövborg. Oh, you certainly had no need to fear a repetition.

Hedda. The worst of it was that the whole town got to know what kind of a life you were leading. What kind of company you had got into.

Lövborg. I don't think, though, that I took any pains to conceal it. I did it in defiance!

Hedda. And that is why all the best houses were closed to you.

Lövborg. Yes, the others. But that you—you, Hedda—!

Hedda. Of course we had to do as the others.

Lövborg. Yes, but—that is precisely what I had never imagined.

Hedda. Well—fortunately you soon consoled yourself in the country.

Lövborg. Not so soon as you think.

Hedda. No?

Lövborg. But as I never heard any more from you—never had a word in answer to my letters—

Hedda. It is imprudent to put things in writing. And besides—I ended by giving you a sufficiently plain answer—in deeds.

Lövborg. Yes, you went and married another. When I heard that, it was quite natural that I should try to console myself, as you call it.

Hedda. I'm sure I quite agree.
Lövborg. But, by-the-bye, how do you know all this? Mrs. Elfsted must have told you something.

Hedda. Mrs. Elfsted has told me—most of it—Ought she not to have done so?

Lövborg. Yes, to you, Hedda—with all my heart.

Hedda. But—now that—happily—you are on your feet again—. Do you know what I think so very strange in you?

Lövborg. Well?

Hedda. That you should sit here lamenting over an old story like this. Over something which now, I should think, must be—what shall I call it?—a sort of exercise of your memory.

Lövborg. Then do you too labour under the prejudice that a man can only feel love for one woman—at a time?

Hedda (looking before her for a moment). Well—perhaps you're right in—(half turned towards him). What is one really to believe—if that be so?

Lövborg. Oh, I entirely forgot that you don't believe there is such a thing as love.

Hedda (turning over the pages of the album). You mustn't take everything I say so literally, either.

Lövborg (looks at her a moment, and whispers passionately). Oh, Hedda! Hedda Gabler! Now I begin to see a hidden meaning beneath all you have been saying.

Hedda (softly, with a glance). Take care! Believe nothing of the sort!

(The hall door is opened from without by Berta.)

Hedda (closes the album with a bang and calls smilingly). Ah, at last! My darling Thea—come along!

(Mrs. Elfsted enters, without her cloak. She is in evening dress. The door is closed behind her.)
HEDDA (on the sofa, stretches out her arms towards her).

Oh, Thea—you can’t think how I have been longing for you all this time!

(MRS. ELFSTED goes up to the table and gives HEDDA her hand. LÖVBORG has risen from his chair. He and MRS. ELFSTED greet each other with a silent nod.)

MRS. ELFSTED (who remains standing). Ought I not to say good evening to your husband too?

HEDDA. Oh, leave those two where they are. They are going soon.

MRS. ELFSTED. Are they going out?

HEDDA. Yes, to a bachelor party.

MRS. ELFSTED (involuntarily). Not you, Mr. LÖvborg?

LÖVBORG. No.

HEDDA. No, Mr. LÖvborg remains with you and me.

MRS. ELFSTED (takes a chair and is about to seat herself). Ah, how nice it is here!

HEDDA. No, thank you. Not there! You’ll be good enough to come over here to me. I will sit between you.

MRS. ELFSTED. Yes, just as you please.

(She goes round the table and seats herself on the sofa on HEDDA’s right. LÖVBORG also seats himself.)

LÖVBORG (after a short pause, to HEDDA). Is not she lovely to look at?

HEDDA. Only to look at?

MRS. ELFSTED (anxiously to HEDDA). Oh, but does he know——?

HEDDA. Of course he knows——

LÖVBORG. You were quite right to tell Hedda everything.

MRS. ELFSTED. Thank heaven! I was so afraid you would not like it.
HEDDA. You afraid! When you have such power over him?

MRS. ELFSTED. Oh, I have no power in reality. If we share our thoughts and opinions, it is purely voluntary on both sides.

LÖVBORG (to HEDDA). Yes. We two—she and I—we are two good comrades. Frank, trusty comrades. A man and a woman who have absolute faith in each other—though our fellowship is one of perfect freedom. And then she is so brave, Hedda!

MRS. ELFSTED. Good heavens—am I brave?

LÖVBORG. Perhaps not in other ways. But exceedingly, where your comrade is concerned.

HEDDA. Ah, courage—courage. If one only had that.

MRS. ELFSTED. There was nothing so very courageous in coming away when——

LÖVBORG. Oh yes, dear friend, it takes a good deal of courage to leave one's husband. To leave house and home. And all to throw in one's lot freely with another.

HEDDA. Yes, I certainly think so too, Thea. (Lightly stroking her hair.) I can't imagine—no, I don't understand how you could do it. How you could dare actually to set about it.

MRS. ELFSTED. But there was nothing else to be done. I could not possibly stay up there alone—with—

HEDDA. —with the other?

MRS. ELFSTED (hides her face in her hands and leans her head on Hedda's shoulder). Oh, Hedda—Hedda!

HEDDA. And then the worst part of it all! It will be impossible to keep this a secret for long.

LÖVBORG. That she has left her home, yes. That will soon be common property. But no one except you will know that she did it to be with me.
Mrs. Elfsted (to Hedda). No, that must not come out for the world! You won't say anything to Tesman, will you?

Hedda. Not to any living soul, Thea dear.

Lövborg. For I have to make a fresh start. And a man with a past like mine—. H'm! One knows pretty well how people would interpret such a connection. She too would be dragged in the mire.

Hedda (looking before her). Yes, if only we could be free of—of what people think—

(There is a general leave-taking. Judge Brack, Lövborg and Tesman go out by the hall door. At the same time, Berta brings in two lamps through the inner room, places them on the tables in the drawing-room, and goes out again through the inner room.)

Mrs. Elfsted. Hedda—Hedda—what will come of all this?

Hedda. We shall see about ten o'clock.

Mrs. Elfsted (rises and crosses the room). I only hope we may. But you don't know him so well as I do.

Hedda. Can he be so pitiful as that! With such a thirst, such a devouring thirst for all that he calls the joys of life, and then—not daring to take even a sip of them!

Mrs. Elfsted. Ah yes, Hedda, unhappily it is true.

Hedda (rising). It is not true! You may doubt him as long as you please. I believe in him! Now we will try—

Mrs. Elfsted. You have some hidden motive in this, Hedda!
HEDDA. Yes, I have. I want for once in my life to have power over a human mind.

MRS. ELFSTED. Have you not the power?

HEDDA. I have not and have never had it.

MRS. ELFSTED. Not your husband’s?

HEDDA. His! Do you think that is worth the trouble? Oh, if you could only understand how poor I am.

(Claps her passionately in her arms.)

MRS. ELFSTED. Let me go! Let me go! I am afraid of you, Hedda!

BERTA (from the inner room). Tea is laid in the dining-room, ma’am. (Goes out again.)

HEDDA. Very well! Come along to tea, you little—you lucky little stupid!

(She drags MRS. ELFSTED almost by force towards the door at the back.)

FROM THE THIRD ACT

HEDDA (goes towards her). There there there! There’s nothing to be so alarmed about. I know quite well what has happened.

MRS. ELFSTED. Well, what do you think? Won’t you tell me?

HEDDA. Why—of course it has been a pretty late affair at Judge Brack’s. These bachelors generally make things rather lively.

MRS. ELFSTED. Yes, yes, yes—that is clear enough!

HEDDA. And Tesman hasn’t cared to come home and ring us up in the middle of the night. He didn’t want to disturb me. (Laughing.) Perhaps he wasn’t inclined to show himself either—immediately after a jovial party.
Mrs. Elfsted. But in that case—where can he have gone?

Hedda. Of course he has gone to those blessed Aunts' and slept there. They have his old room ready for him.

Mrs. Elfsted. No, he can't be with them; for a letter has just come for him from Miss Rysing. There it lies.

Hedda. Indeed? (Looks at the address.) Why yes, it's addressed in Aunt Jane's own hand. Well then—he is staying behind at Judge Brack's—he too.

Mrs. Elfsted. He too? Do you mean that Lövborg—?

Hedda. Yes, Lövborg is certainly there still. Otherwise he would have come to fetch you.

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh Hedda, you are just saying things you don't believe a bit.

Hedda. Well, bless me—even if it's as bad as you think? What of it? Once doesn't count.

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, that's just what does not apply here. Here least of all!

Tesman (sits down heavily to the left of the table). Enjoyed myself? Oh, Hedda—I'm afraid it will take me a long time to get over to-night.

Hedda. You! But you are always moderate—

Tesman. Yes, of course. I didn't mean that—

Hedda (in suspense). What became of Eilert Lövborg? Why didn't he come back?

Tesman. Well, you see, Hedda, that is just it. And I can't get rid of the distressing thought that it was all my fault.

Hedda. But what was your fault?
TESMAN. I must tell you the whole story.
HEDDA. Yes, yes, do.

(She seats herself on the other side of the table.)

TESMAN. It began well enough. Nobody chaffed him. And nobody tempted him either. He and I were able to sit by ourselves in one of the side rooms. And then he read to me. Long extracts from the new book that is coming out.

HEDDA. Well?

TESMAN. You can’t imagine what a book that is going to be, Hedda! So grand both in design and execution—

HEDDA. Yes, yes, I don’t care about that. And it has nothing to do with the story either.

TESMAN. Yes, it has. It is the very kernel of it, you see.

HEDDA. How?

TESMAN. As I sat listening to him—. It seemed as if a rustling flight of ideas were darting over my head. I felt myself filled with a wealth of intuition, which I only half understood.

HEDDA. Could you not understand it?

TESMAN. Not altogether, I say. And then came that gnawing thought, that has haunted me and that I have thrust away from me—ever since our school-days.

HEDDA. What thought?

TESMAN. That Eilert Lövborg is really my superior.

HEDDA. But what if he is? He has no intention of competing with you for the appointment.

TESMAN. Every one who reads his new book will say that he was the right man. And therefore I could not resist it. Oh, Hedda, what evil may lie hid in a man!

HEDDA. Tell me more about this!
HEDDA GABLER 427

TESMAN. Then some more lively companions joined us. They had been to a big dinner-party. Came straight from table.

HEDDA. And then it began?

TESMAN. Yes, then came the orgie. I saw it was coming. And I saw too that it seemed to carry Eilert Lövborg away.

HEDDA. Could he not resist?

TESMAN. Neither could nor would. I saw what it would lead to. And—just think—I did nothing to save him.

HEDDA. Oh, I suppose there was nothing to be done.

TESMAN. Yes, I might have tried to get him home with me. Might have reminded him of his promise to Mrs. Elfsted.

HEDDA. Oh yes. Do you think that would have been any use?

TESMAN. Yes, I think so. For she has a power over him that nobody else has.

HEDDA. How do you know that?

TESMAN. I could understand that from all he said.

HEDDA. What did he say!

TESMAN. That the whole of his new work came to him as an inspiration from her.

HEDDA. And in spite of that—he wallowed in these orgies——

TESMAN. Deeper than you have any idea of.

HEDDA. What became of him?

TESMAN. He went off with a lot of the others. But where they went I don't know. Both Brack and I went to his rooms and rang. But he hadn't come home.

HEDDA. That was to be expected. And you don't know any more?
Tesman. No. Brack and I separated, so as to inquire in different directions. But they knew nothing about him, where I went. He must have gone by himself—

Hedda. And Brack—?

Tesman. I haven’t seen him since. Oh, that unhappy fellow—! Now he is down again. And then after all—Hedda—to think that—

Hedda. What? What do you mean?

Tesman. That I let him go. That I could sit there secretly wishing that he would go and ruin himself for ever.—Am I better than he? In my inmost heart! If this is the end of him, that question will never leave me any peace.

Hedda. I don’t think there’s any use in brooding over things of that sort.

Tesman. But his conduct last night cannot possibly have been more than a passing aberration. There was such profound sincerity in the way he spoke of her.

Hedda. Was there?

Tesman. I don’t understand him. Can’t conceive how it is with him.

Hedda. Let him fall, Tesman. He is irretrievable after all.

Tesman. Oh, don’t let us think that.—I was able to do him one service.

Hedda. Last night?

Tesman. Yes. (Taking Lövborg’s portfolio out of his coat pocket.) I rescued this for him.

Hedda. His new book!

Tesman. Yes; as we were leaving. He and some of the others were a little way in front. I heard him shouting and making a noise. And as I was hurrying after them to try to quiet him, I found the portfolio lying by the wayside. He had lost it.

HEDDA. Let me see it.

TESMAN (handing her the portfolio). Here it is. Just think if that had been lost. And it might have been so easily.

HEDDA (turning over the papers). This is not Lövborg's handwriting.

TESMAN. Mrs. Elfsted wrote parts of it for him. From loose notes, he said.

HEDDA. So that is how they sat working together. (Shuts her eyes.) I seem to be able to see them.

TESMAN. You too might work with me in the same way, Hedda. Might help me—if you cared to.

HEDDA. You!—(Looking at him and tapping the portfolio with her finger.) Well, Tesman—what are you going to do with this?

TESMAN. Do with it, dear? Give it him back, of course.

HEDDA. Yes, yes, I suppose that is what you will do.

TESMAN. But he shall have a good fright first. Put it away in the writing-table drawer. And say nothing.

HEDDA. You said nothing to him about having found it?

TESMAN. No, of course not. In the unmanageable state he was in.

HEDDA. Did any of the others see you find it?

TESMAN. No, none of them.

HEDDA. And you didn't tell any of them afterwards either?

TESMAN. No, I wouldn't do that for his sake.

HEDDA. So no one knows what has become of it?

TESMAN. No. And he shall wait a little while before he is told.
Hedda (goes to the writing-table and places the portfolio underneath some books). There. He shall never get this back.

Tesman (springing up). But, Hedda—what are you thinking of! What do you mean?

Hedda. This must be got rid of. [Were you not thinking of getting rid of this?]

Tesman. What has come over you?

Hedda. Do you think he would be able to write it over again?

Tesman. Impossible. The inspiration would be lacking the second time.

Hedda. Take it and burn it. Then it will be done with.

Tesman. But you must be mad.

Hedda. You must do it. I must see whether I have any power over you.

Tesman. Oh, you know quite well you have.

Hedda. Not altogether. I know I have over him.

Tesman. Over him!

Hedda. It was I who made him go to Judge Brack's drinking-party.

Tesman. Oh, Hedda, but how could you do that!

Hedda. It came over me with such force. So irresistibly. I had to see whether I could tempt him to his fall.

Tesman. And it turned out that you could.

Hedda. Yes. But this must be the end of it. He must go away from here.

Tesman. Away! For your sake!

Hedda. Yes. If not, I can't answer for anything.

Tesman. Hedda!

Hedda. Not on any pretext must he be allowed to come here!
HEDDA GABLER 431

TESMAN. Oh, I see what it is. You have never really been able to forget him altogether!

HEDDA. I don’t know myself. Only get him out of the way. I will not have my thoughts fixed on anything but—what is coming.

TESMAN. What is coming!

HEDDA. Yes.

TESMAN. Oh, Hedda—if I understand you aright.

HEDDA. Yes, you do.

TESMAN. Oh, Hedda, Hedda! And Aunt Jane! Think how happy Aunt Jane will be.

HEDDA. Ugh, don’t be so ridiculous!

TESMAN. Ridiculous?

HEDDA. Yes, isn’t it ridiculous and absurd that the first thing you do is to cry out for—Aunt Jane?—By-the-bye, there is a letter from her here.

TESMAN. For me?

HEDDA. Yes. (Handing it to him.) It came early this morning.

TESMAN (opening it). What can it be?

HEDDA. Perhaps she has heard something about him.

TESMAN (runs his eye through it). Oh, Hedda—she says that Aunt Rina is dying.

HEDDA. Well, we were prepared for that.

TESMAN. She says that if I want to see her again, I must make haste. I’ll run in to them at once.

HEDDA (suppressing a smile). Run!

TESMAN (takes his hat and throws his overcoat over his arm). I do hope I mayn’t come too late.

HEDDA. Oh, if you run——

(BERTA appears at the hall door.)

BERTA. Judge Brack is here, and wishes to know if he may come in.

TESMAN. Judge Brack! No, I can’t possibly see him.
Hedda. But I can. (To Berta.) Ask Judge Brack to come in.

(Berta opens the door to Judge Brack, and goes out herself.)

Brack. Oh, are you starting again to hunt for him—the bird of ill omen?

Tesman. No, I must rush off to my aunts'. The invalid one is lying at death's door.

Brack. Dear me, is she indeed?

Tesman. And did you find any trace of him?

Brack. No. And you?

Tesman. I didn't either.

Brack. I didn't think you would. But don't let me detain you. At such a critical moment——

Tesman. Yes, I must really hurry—Good-bye! Good-bye! (He goes out by the hall door.)

Hedda. Well, you seem to have had quite a lively night.

Brack. I have not had my clothes off a moment, Mrs. Hedda.

Hedda. And yet you have heard nothing.

Brack. Oh yes, I have. Practically everything.

Hedda. But you said——

Brack. Tesman was on tenterhooks to get away, you see.

Hedda. Yes, aren't you sorry for poor Tesman? Just think, Aunt Rina—! Well, where did you get hold of Lövborg?

Brack. I didn't get hold of him at all. But I heard that he was being well taken care of.

Hedda. Where?

Brack. At the police station.

Hedda. Ah—but what has he done?
Brack.  H'm—I think we had better not go into details.

Hedda.  Oh yes.  Details above all.  They are what I want to hear about.

Brack.  Well, you must really excuse me all the same, Mrs. Hedda.  I was not present, you know.

Hedda.  You!  No, I know that.

Brack.  I have only heard that he fell in with a lot of other revellers.

Hedda.  Not any of yours?

Brack.  Of mine?

Hedda.  Yes, of your guests then.

Brack.  Oh, can you think that!  No, they always behave themselves out-of-doors.  They go home to bed like good boys.

Hedda.  Yes, yes.  We well-behaved people——

Brack.  No, unfortunately it was some of his old acquaintances he came across.

Hedda.  Well, and then?

Brack.  Then the usual thing happened.  They paid a visit to some—singing girls, I think.

Hedda.  Or something of the sort, yes.  And afterwards?

Brack.  An orgie, presumably.  Followed by the customary free fight with resultant ejection.  Then a street row outside.  Windows smashed.  Police called.  And so to the lock-up.

Hedda.  It must be curious to be present at such a scene.

Brack.  Would you like to be, Mrs. Hedda?

Hedda.  Oh yes, once in a way.  If nobody saw one.  And nobody heard anything of it afterwards.

Brack.  No, I should think not.
Hedda. For there must be something untameable among all this coarseness and vulgarity—. But this is a thing that I keep for your ears alone, my dear Judge.

Brack. I should certainly advise you to do so. But what annoys me beyond measure is that this person could be so inconsiderate as to go straight from my party and——

Hedda. Do you think it will get about that he came from your house?

Brack. Yes, of course it will come out at the police-court.

Hedda. Will the matter come into court!

Brack. Yes—when the police get hold of an affair—. But I had a suspicion that something of this sort was coming. And therefore, Mrs. Hedda, I will give you a friendly piece of advice. After this, you must not allow this person into your house.

Hedda. What do you say!

Brack. Yes, and there is another person that you ought not to receive either.

Hedda. I can see that you mean Mrs. Elfsted.

Brack. Of course. Those two have been plotting together.

Hedda. Do you know anything definite!

Brack. No, but it is not difficult to guess a thing of that sort. She, a woman who as a rule never sets foot in town, arrives here simultaneously with him. It was all arranged between them, Mrs. Hedda.

Hedda. What do you mean?

Brack. Their meeting here in your house.

Hedda. I don’t believe it. You are mistaken.

Brack. Well, wait and see which of us is right. I don’t believe she will go home just at present.

Hedda. No, that she will not do.
Brack. There, you see. Yes, of course I am right. You are to serve as a blind.

Hedda. A blind!

Brack. Now, of course, he will try to win you over. Just watch whether he doesn’t strike the melancholy note. Whether he doesn’t begin talking of bygone days. Of disappointed hopes——

Hedda. —of what might have been so beautiful—but was not to be. Ah yes, one has heard all that.

Brack. Perhaps that was the line that was taken yesterday, when you were sitting here with the album?

Hedda. But now you are getting altogether too suspicious, my dear Judge.

Brack. Well, I confess I am on my guard against that gentleman. It would be terrible to me to think that an intruder was coming into——

Hedda. —into the triangle.

Brack. Yes, precisely. Don’t laugh at it. It would simply mean that I should find myself homeless.

Hedda. Oh, come, I am sure you have plenty of other comfortable homes about town.

Brack. No, unfortunately. Not now. In the last six months I have lost no fewer than three. And those among the best.

Hedda. Oh—did intruding cocks come into those baskets too?

Brack. No, but other intruders arrived——

Hedda. Of what kind?

Brack. Children.

Hedda. Indeed? But what have those children to do with you?

Brack (laughing). They have nothing at all to do with me. That is why I call them intruders.
HEDDA. Then I don’t at all see——
BRACK. But, bless me, you must know that I can’t endure children——
HEDDA. And why not?
BRACK. Because the little angels occupy the whole attention of the mistress of the house. Old friends are nothing to her when an event of that kind takes place.
HEDDA. Egoist!
BRACK. Happily no such danger is threatened here. (Laughing.) Although—I won’t deny that—it would be worth anything——
HEDDA. Worth anything? What?
BRACK. To see—a certain specialist in his new dignity.
HEDDA. Do you think that would make him so supremely ridiculous?
BRACK. Well, you mustn’t be offended, Mrs. Hedda— but I can’t deny——
HEDDA. I won’t listen to you any more, Judge——
BRACK. Ah—indeed! Well, put that gentleman out of your thoughts; for I assure you he doesn’t care a scrap for you.
HEDDA. Only for her, you mean.
BRACK. For his fellow-worker, yes. (Looking at his watch.) But now I must be getting back. Good-bye, Mrs. Hedda. (He goes towards the glass door.)
HEDDA. Are you going through the garden?
BRACK. Yes, it’s a short cut for me.
HEDDA. And then it is a back way, too.
BRACK. Quite so. I have no objection to back ways. At times. They may be piquant enough.
HEDDA. When there is ball practice going on, you mean.
Brack (in the doorway). Oh, people don’t shoot their own poultry, you know. And the stork—is inviolate— Hedda. —and is not to be found in these parts.

Brack. No, no, that’s true.

(Hedda bows, and goes out by the glass door.)

Hedda. You and she!

Lövborg. You can be of no more service to me, Thea!

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, how can you speak so! No more service to you! Am I not to help you? Now, most of all! Are we not to work together?

Lövborg. It is all over. I shall never do any more work. Least of all with you.

Mrs. Elfsted. But what can have come between us!

Lövborg. Let that be as it may. But the comradeship between us is now at an end.

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, but this is so utterly inconceivable. What am I to do with my life?

Lövborg. You must try to live your life as if you had never known me.

Mrs. Elfsted. But you know I cannot do that! How can you think it possible!

Lövborg. Try if you cannot, Thea. You must go home again—

Mrs. Elfsted (with a shriek). Ah—you can say that! Go home again! Leave you!

Lövborg. It will be best for you. And besides—there is nothing else to be done.

Mrs. Elfsted. Never in this world will I go back there. Where you are, there will I be also. And what would happen to you then?
Lövborg. I think you can see what will happen to me.

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, but I must be able to give you some support. I could before. Up there.

Lövborg. For a time, yes. But it wanted nothing but a stormy night to blow all that we had built up into fragments.

Mrs. Elfsted. Well, that cannot be helped.—But I will not let myself be driven away like this. You have no right to do it.

Lövborg. No, I know that.

Mrs. Elfsted. Well, and therefore I will not put up with it! I will not submit to it on any account! Do you hear, Lövborg! I tell you that. I will remain here. I will be with you when the book appears.

Hedda. Ah, the book——!

Lövborg. My book and Thea's, Mrs. Tesman; for that is what it is.

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, that is what it is. You have said that so often. And in my inmost self I feel that it is true. I have my share in its existence.

Lövborg. You have.

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, and that is why I have a right to be present when it appears. I must see with my own eyes how respect and honour are showered upon you. Now more than ever, Lövborg. And the happiness—the happiness—oh, I must share it with you!

Hedda. Ah——!

Mrs. Elfsted. Never appear!

Mrs. Elfsted. Lövborg—what have you done with the manuscript?
HEDDA (breathlessly). The manuscript——!
MRS. ELFSTED. Where is it?
LÖVBORG. Oh Thea—don’t ask me about it!
MRS. ELFSTED. Yes, yes, I will know. I demand to be told at once.
LÖVBORG. The manuscript—. Well then—I have torn the manuscript into a thousand pieces.
MRS. ELFSTED. Oh no, no——!
HEDDA (involuntarily). But that’s not true!
LÖVBORG (looks at her). Not true——!
HEDDA (collecting herself). Oh well, of course. But it sounded so incredible——
LÖVBORG. It is true, all the same, Mrs. Tesman.
MRS. ELFSTED. Just think, Hedda—torn his own work to pieces.
LÖVBORG. Tore it into a thousand pieces—and scattered them on the fiord—far out. There there is cool sea-water at any rate—let them drift upon it—drift with the current and the wind. And then presently they will sink—deeper and deeper—as I shall, Thea.
MRS. ELFSTED. Oh, Lövborg, Lövborg—this is terrible to think of.
LÖVBORG. Yes. Therefore you must go away in time.
MRS. ELFSTED (without listening to him). Do you know, Lövborg, that to my dying day I shall think of what you have done now as though you had killed a little child.
LÖVBORG. Yes, you are right, Thea. It is a sort of child-murder.
MRS. ELFSTED. How could you then——! Did it not belong to me too?
HEDDA. Ah——.
Lövborg. That is why I would rather part from you now. After this, you understand.

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, oh yes, I can understand. But it seems impossible that we can part nevertheless! Well well, now I will go, Hedda.

Hedda. But you are not going away from town?

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, I don't know. I see nothing but darkness before me.

(She goes out by the hall door.)

Hedda. So you are not going to see her home, Mr. Lövborg?

Lövborg. I? Through the streets? In broad daylight?

Hedda. No, no—. Though, after all—! Is it then so utterly irretrievable—this that happened last night?

Lövborg. It will not end with last night—I know that perfectly well—it is all over with me now.

Hedda. But can you never learn to control yourself?

Lövborg. No—that is just what I cannot do. And that is the desperate part of it. It is not with me as with so many others. They have it in their power to pull themselves up, when they find it running away with them. I shall never be able to learn that. I have brought myself down to be a bondman. Lost the power over my own will.

Hedda. Yes, yes. But how could you treat poor Thea so heartlessly?

Lövborg. Oh, don't say that it was heartless!

Hedda. To go and destroy what has filled her whole soul day and night—for months and years. You do not call that heartless!

Lövborg. To you I can tell it, Hedda—

Hedda. What can you tell?
LOVborg. Beautifully?

HeddA. For once in a way. Good-bye, you must go now. And do not come here any more.

LOVborg. Good-bye, Mrs. Tesman. And give George Tesman my love.

HeddA. No, wait. I must give you a memento to take with you.

(She goes to the writing-table, opens the drawer and returns to LOVborg with one of the pistols.)

LOVborg. This? Is this the memento?

HeddA. Do you remember—you asked me for it once before.

LOVborg. You would not give it me then;

HeddA. Take it. Now it is yours.

LOVborg (puts the pistol in his breast pocket). Thanks.

HeddA. And beautifully—promise me that.

LOVborg. Good-bye—Hedda Gabler.

(He goes out by the hall door.)

(HeddA listens for a moment. Then she goes up to the writing-table, takes out LOVborg's manuscript, goes with it and seats herself in the armchair beside the stove, opens the packet and sorts the blue and white quires separately, lays the white quires in the wrapper again and keeps the blue ones in her lap.)

HeddA (opens the stove door; presently she throws one of the blue quires into the fire and whispers to herself). Now I am burning your child, Thea! (Throwing one or two more quires into the stove.) Your child and Eilert Lövborg's. ( Throws the rest in.) I am burning—I am burning your child.

FOURTH ACT

The same room at the Tesmans'. It is evening. In the drawing-room a lighted lamp stands on the table in the corner to the right. The hanging lamp in the inner room is also lighted.

(Hedda walks to and fro in the inner room and disappears for a moment to the left. She is heard to strike a few chords on the piano. Presently she comes in sight again, and enters the drawing-room.)

(Berta enters from the right, through the inner room, with a lighted lamp, which she places on the writing-table. Her eyes are red with weeping, and she has black ribbons in her cap. She goes quietly and circumspectly out to the right.)

(A little while afterwards, Miss Tesman, in mourning, with a bonnet and veil on, comes in from the hall.)

Miss Tesman. Yes, Hedda—now my poor sister has at last found peace.

Hedda (pressing her hand). I have heard the news already. Tesman sent me a card.

Miss Tesman. He said he would do so. But I thought nevertheless I ought myself to bring the tidings.

Hedda. That was very kind of you. She died quite peacefully, did she not?

Miss Tesman. Oh, she went so calmly, so beautifully. And then she had the great happiness of seeing George once more—and bidding him good-bye. Has he not come home yet?
HEDDA. No; he wrote that he might be detained. But won't you sit down?
Miss Tesman. No, thank you. I have so much to do. I must prepare my dear one for her rest as well as I can.

(George Tesman enters by the hall door.)

HEDDA. How long you have been.
Tesman. You here, Aunt Julia!
Miss Tesman. I was just going. Well, have you seen to what you promised?
Tesman. No, I clean forgot it. My brain is in a whirl. I can't keep my thoughts together.
Miss Tesman. Why, you mustn't take it so much to heart.
Tesman. Not take it to heart!
Miss Tesman. You ought to have expected it. And was it not best for her to be at rest?
Tesman. Oh yes! Of course——
Miss Tesman. And now you have other things to think of.
Tesman. Yes, yes, so I have——
Miss Tesman. That is the way of the world, Hedda. My home is the house of death, and this——this is the house of life.

Hedda. Life! Here!
Miss Tesman. At home we shall be sewing a shroud; and here there will soon be sewing too, I suppose—but of another sort, thank God!

HEDDA. Oh, has he gone and told her!
Miss Tesman. Yes, therefore we must rejoice. For one thing as well as the other.
HEDDA. You will feel lonely now.
Miss Tesman. That will not last long. I shall find an occupant for poor Rina's little room.
TESMAN. Who do you think will take it?
MISS TESMAN. Oh, there’s always some invalid body in want of nursing—unfortunately.
HEDDA. Would you really take such a burden upon you again?
MISS TESMAN. A burden! Heaven forgive you, child—it has been no burden to me.
HEDDA. Well, but if you had a stranger on your hands.
MISS TESMAN. Oh, one soon makes friends with the sick; and it’s such an absolute necessity for me to have some one to live for. Well, heaven be praised, there will soon be something in this house, too, to keep me busy.
HEDDA. Oh, don’t trouble about that.
TESMAN. Oh yes, how nice everything might be——
HEDDA. If——?
TESMAN. Oh, nothing. It will all come right.
MISS TESMAN. Yes, yes, I daresay you two have a great deal to say to each other. Good-bye. I must go home to Rina.

(There are leave-takings. MISS TESMAN goes.)

HEDDA. I can’t make it out. It seems as though this affected you more than it does her.
TESMAN. Oh, it is not that. It’s Eilert Lövborg I am so uneasy about.
HEDDA. Is there anything new about him?
TESMAN. I met Mrs. Elfsted this afternoon.
HEDDA. Yes!
TESMAN. And she told me that he had been here early this morning.
HEDDA. Yes, directly after you had gone.
TESMAN. He wanted to see me, I suppose.
HEDDA. No, it was Mrs. Elfsted he asked for.
TESMAN. Did he not inquire about the manuscript too?
Hedda. No, it never occurred to him that you had found it.

Tesman. I can't make it out. I hear he said that he had torn it to pieces.

Hedda. Yes, so he told us.

Tesman. But did you not tell him that I had found it? That you were keeping it?

Hedda. No.

Tesman. But, good heavens—! Just think of the desperate state he must have been in.

Hedda. Desperate! What makes you think that?

Tesman. Of course it was shame and humiliation that made him say that. That he had wilfully destroyed it.

Hedda. Yes, perhaps so.

Tesman. He naturally did not want to confess that he had been in such a state. That he did not know what he had done with his own belongings.

Hedda. And you did not tell her that you had the packet?

Tesman. No, I was ashamed on his account.

Hedda. Be sure you don't say anything.

Tesman. Well, but it must come out all the same. He must have it back, the sooner the better. Where is it?

Hedda. I have not got it.

Tesman. Have not got it? What in the world do you mean? What have you done with it?

Hedda. I have burnt it.

Tesman. Burnt! Burnt his manuscript.

Hedda. Don't scream so. The servant might hear you.

Tesman. Burnt! Why, good God—! No, no, no, it's impossible.

Hedda. It is so, nevertheless.
Tesman. Do you know what you have done? It's unlawful appropriation of lost property. Just ask Judge Brack, and he'll tell you what it is!

Hedda. Don't speak of it to any one. Neither to Judge Brack nor to any one else.

Tesman. But your reason, Hedda! I must know your reason! For I feel that you are concealing something from me. Answer me.

Hedda. Yes. I did it for your sake.

Tesman. For mine!

Hedda. When you came home and spoke so highly of what he had read to you.

Tesman. Yes yes—what then?

Hedda. I could not bear the idea that he should throw you into the shade.

Tesman. Hedda! Is this true?

Hedda. You must remember that—at this time—. I am not like my usual self——

Tesman. Oh, great heavens—! It was for love of me!

Hedda. Don't shout so. The servant might hear.

Tesman. Well, let her. I'll tell Berta myself.

Hedda. Oh, it will be the end of me, all this.

Tesman. What will?

Hedda. All this—absurdity.

Tesman. Absurdity. Well well, then. Perhaps it won't do to say anything to Berta.

Hedda. Oh—why not?

Tesman. No, no, I see that. But I must certainly tell Aunt Julia. Oh, she will be so happy, so happy——

Hedda. When she hears that I have burnt Eilert Lövborg's manuscript?

Tesman. No, by-the-bye—that affair of the burning—nobody must know about that. But that your love for me has awakened in this way——
HEDDA. Say nothing about that.
TESMAN. Oh yes—Aunt Julia must share in that.
Oh, I am so happy—so proud—
HEDDA. Well, be so. But keep it to yourself.
TESMAN. I cannot, Hedda. That would take away half the pleasure of it. I wonder, now, whether this sort of awakening is usual in young wives?
HEDDA. You had better ask Aunt Julia that question too.
TESMAN. I will, some time or other. For she knows all about such things.

(MRS. ELFSTED, with her cloak on, enters by the hall door. She appears to be much agitated.)

MRS. ELFSTED. Oh, dear Hedda, forgive my coming again—
HEDDA. What is the matter with you, Thea?
TESMAN. Something about Eilert Lövborg again?
MRS. ELFSTED. Oh, I am so dreadfully afraid some misfortune has happened to him—
HEDDA. Ah—do you think so?
TESMAN. But, good Lord—what makes you think so, Mrs. Elfsted?
MRS. ELFSTED. I heard them talking of him at my boarding-house, just as I came in—
TESMAN. Well? What did they say?
MRS. ELFSTED. Oh, I couldn’t make out anything clearly. Either they knew nothing definite, or else— They stopped talking when they saw me.
TESMAN. You surely misunderstood them—
MRS. ELFSTED. No, no; I am sure it was of him they were talking. And I heard something about the hospital—
TESMAN. About the hospital!
HEDDA. Surely that cannot be.
Mrs. Elfsted. I was in such mortal terror. And then—just think—

Tesman. Yes?

Mrs. Elfsted. I went to his lodgings and asked for him—

Hedda. How could you make up your mind to do such a thing!

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, because I couldn't endure it.

Tesman. But you didn't find him?

Mrs. Elfsted. No. And the people knew nothing about him. He hadn't been home since yesterday afternoon, they said. Oh, I am sure something has happened to him!

Tesman. Hedda—how would it be if I were to go and get Brack—

Hedda. No, not in this affair.

(Judge Brack, with his hat in his hand, enters by the hall door, which Berta opens, and closes behind him. He looks grave.)

Tesman. Oh, is that you, my dear Judge?

Brack. Yes. It was imperative I should see you.

Tesman. I can see you have heard about Aunt Rina.

Brack. Yes, that among other things.

Tesman. Isn't it sad—eh?

Brack. Oh, that depends on how you look at it.

Tesman. Has anything else happened?

Brack. Yes.

Mrs. Elfsted (in suspense). Anything sad, Judge Brack?

Brack. That, too depends on how you look at it, Mrs. Elfsted.

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh! it is something about Eilert Lövborg?
Brack. What makes you think that? Have you already heard something?
Mrs. Elfsted. No, no, but——
Tesman. Oh, for heaven's sake, tell us!
Brack. Eilert Lövborg has been taken to the hospital.

He is lying at the point of death.
Tesman. At the point of death! In the hospital.
Hedda. Ah——!
Mrs. Elfsted. Oh God! oh God——
Hedda (whispers). Thea—be careful.
Mrs. Elfsted. I must go to him! I must see him alive.

Brack. It is useless. No one will be admitted.
Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, at least tell me what has happened to him?
Tesman. You don’t mean to say that he has himself——!
Hedda. Yes, I am sure he has.
Tesman. Hedda, how can you——!
Brack. Unfortunately you have guessed quite correctly, Mrs. Tesman.
Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, how horrible!
Tesman. Himself, then——!
Hedda. Shot himself!
Brack. Rightly guessed again.
Mrs. Elfsted. When did it happen?
Brack. This afternoon—between three and four.
Tesman. And where did he do it?
Brack. Where? Well—I suppose at his lodgings——
Mrs. Elfsted. No, that is not so; for I was there between seven and eight.

Brack. Well then, somewhere else. I don’t know precisely. I only know that he was found——. He had shot himself—in the breast.
Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, how awful!
Hedda. Was it in the breast?—?
Brack. Yes.
Hedda. Not in the temple?
Brack. No, it was in the breast.
Hedda. Well, well, the breast is a good place, too.
Brack. How do you mean?
Hedda. Oh, nothing—nothing.
Tesman. And the wound is dangerous?
Brack. Absolutely mortal. The end has probably come by this time.
Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, yes, I feel it! And then not to see him.
Tesman. How have you learnt this?
Brack. Through one of the police. A man I had some business with—
Hedda. At last a deed worth doing!
Tesman. Hedda—what are you saying?
Hedda. I say there is beauty in this!
Brack. H'm—Mrs. Tesman—
Mrs. Elfsted. Beauty! Oh, Hedda—how can you—
Tesman. But, great heaven—Hedda—
Hedda. He has passed judgment on himself, and has had the courage to do—the one right thing.
Tesman. And you can speak thus of something so reprehensible! Fancy—a suicide—
Mrs. Elfsted. Oh yes, yes. But do not condemn him. He did it in delirium—
Hedda. No, no, that he did not. I am certain of that.
Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, he did. In delirium. Just as when he tore up our manuscript.
Brack. The manuscript? Has he torn that up?
Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, last night.

Tesman (softly). Oh, Hedda—Hedda.

Brack. H'm—very extraordinary.

Tesman. To think of his going out of the world without leaving behind him anything that would have immortalised his memory.

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh, but think, if it could be put together again!

Tesman. Yes, if it only could. I don't know what I would not give, if it only could—

Mrs. Elfsted. Perhaps it can, Mr. Tesman.

Tesman. How!

Mrs. Elfsted. Look here. I have kept all the loose notes he used to dictate to me from.

Hedda. Ah—!

Tesman. You have them!

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, here. I brought them with me.

I was going to ask you or Hedda to keep them.

Tesman. Oh, let me see. Let me see!

Mrs. Elfsted. But they are in such disorder—so mixed up.

Tesman. If we could make something out of them. Perhaps if we two put our heads together.

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, let us try.

Tesman. We will manage it. I will dedicate my life to this.

Hedda. You? Your life?

Tesman. Yes, or all the time I can spare. My own collections must wait in the meantime. Hedda—you understand. I owe this to my friend.

Hedda. Perhaps.

Tesman. And so, my dear Mrs. Elfsted, we will give our whole minds to it. We will control our grief. Will you promise me that?
MRS. ELFSTED. I will try to do that.

TESMAN. Come here. I can't rest until we have looked through them. A thing of this sort—arranging other people's papers—is just the work for me. Where shall we sit—here? No, in there, in the back room. Excuse me—my dear Judge. Come along, Mrs. Elfsted.

MRS. ELFSTED. Oh, if only it were possible.

(TESMAN and MRS. ELFSTED go into the back room, sit at the table under the hanging lamp, and are soon deep in the papers. HEDDA crosses to the stove and sits in the armchair. Presently BRACK goes up to her.)

HEDDA. Oh, what a sense of freedom this gives one.

BRACK. Freedom?

HEDDA. Yes, to know that a deed is still possible in this world—a deed of beauty.

BRACK. H'm—my dear Mrs. Hedda—

HEDDA. Oh, I know what you are going to say. For you are a kind of specialist too, like—you know. You are neither able nor willing to see what there is in this deed of Eilert Lövborg's.

BRACK. Mrs. Hedda—this man was more to you than perhaps you are willing to admit—. Is that not so?

HEDDA. I don't answer that. But now I can see him as he used to be. And I may say this to you. To me his reckless life was not aberration. There was spirit in it. Defiance of public opinion. It was not expiation of faults that he intended. He ended his life in freedom and courage.

BRACK. I am sorry, Mrs. Hedda, but I fear I must dispel an amiable illusion—

HEDDA. Illusion?

BRACK. Which could not have lasted long in any case.
Hedda. What do you mean?
Brack. The thing did not happen exactly as I told it.
Hedda. How then?
Brack. Eilert Lövborg did not shoot himself!
Hedda. Is he not shot?
Brack. Yes. But it is not a case of suicide.
Hedda. Now you are belying him!
Brack. And it was not at his lodgings——
Hedda. That makes no difference.
Brack. Eilert Lövborg died of an accidental shot in the same low tavern where he made a disturbance last night.
Hedda. Impossible! He cannot have been there again today.
Brack. He was there. He went to look for something. Talked wildly. Accused them of having stolen a child from him——
Hedda. Ah——!
Brack. I thought he meant his manuscript; but he destroyed that himself, didn't he? So I suppose it must have been his pocket-book.——Then there was a fight. He was thrown downstairs. Had a loaded pistol in his pocket. It goes off, and the ball lodges—not in the breast, but in the bowels.
Hedda. Oh, what curse it is that makes everything I touch turn ludicrous and mean?
Brack. There is another disagreeable feature in the affair, Mrs. Hedda.
Hedda. And what is that?
Brack. The pistol he carried——
Hedda. Well——what of it——
Brack. He must have stolen it——
Hedda. Stolen it! That is not true!
Brack. No other explanation is possible—hush——
(Tesman and Mrs. Elfsted have risen from the table in the back room, and come into the drawing-room.)

Tesman (with the papers in both his hands). Impossible to see under that lamp. Do you mind our sitting at your writing-table, Hedda?

Hedda. If you like. No, wait. Let me clear it first.
Tesman. Oh, there is plenty of room.
Hedda. No, no, let me clear it. I will take these things in and put them on the piano. There.

(She takes a case out of the shelf, places sheet music over it and carries it into the inner room, to the left. Tesman lays the papers on the writing-table, and moves the lamp there from the corner table. He and Mrs. Elfsted sit down and become engrossed in the papers. Hedda returns.)

Hedda. Well, are you getting on?
Tesman. It will be terribly hard to put in order.

(Hedda goes over to the stove, and seats herself in the armchair. Brack stands beside her.)

Hedda (whispers). What did you say about the pistol?

Brack. That he must have stolen it.
Hedda. Why do you think so?
Brack. Eilert Lövborg was here this morning.
Hedda. Yes.
Brack. Were you alone with him?
Hedda. Part of the time.
Brack. Were you out of the room whilst he was here?

Hedda. No.
Brack. Try to recollect. Were you not out of the room a moment?
HEDDA. Yes—perhaps just a moment.

BRACK. And where was your pistol-case during that time?

HEDDA. It stood there on the shelf of the writing-table.

BRACK. Have you looked since, to see whether both the pistols are there?

HEDDA. No.

BRACK. Well, you need not. I saw the one found in his pocket, and I knew it at once.

HEDDA. Have you it with you?

BRACK. No; the police have it.

HEDDA. What will the police do with it?

BRACK. Search till they find the owner.

HEDDA. Do you think they will succeed?

BRACK. Not so long as I say nothing.

HEDDA. And if you do not say nothing?

BRACK. Well—Mrs. Hedda—then comes the scandal.

HEDDA. The scandal!

BRACK. The scandal, of which you are in such mortal terror. You will be brought before the court. Will have to give evidence. Was it stolen? Or did you give it to him? And what conclusions will people draw from that?

HEDDA. That is true. I did not think of that.

BRACK. Well, fortunately, there is no danger, so long as I say nothing.

HEDDA. So I am in your power.

BRACK. I shall not abuse my advantage, Hedda.

HEDDA. I am in your power none the less. A slave! a slave then! Oh, that intolerable thought. I cannot endure it! Never! (Rises.) Well, are you getting on, Tesman?
Tesman. Heaven knows. It will be the work of months.

Hedda (passes her hands softly through Mrs. Elfsted’s hair.) Doesn’t it seem strange to you, Thea? Here are you sitting with Tesman, just as you used to sit with Eilert Lövborg.

Mrs. Elfsted. Ah yes, if I could only inspire your husband in the same way.

Hedda. I am sure you can.

Tesman. Yes, I really think I begin to feel something of the sort. But won’t you go and sit with Brack again?

Hedda. Is there nothing I can do to help you two?

Tesman. Nothing in the world. You will have to keep Hedda company, my dear Brack.

Brack. With great pleasure.

Hedda. Thanks. But now I am going to lie down on the sofa.

Tesman. Yes, do.

(Hedda goes into the back room and draws the curtains. There is a pause. Suddenly Hedda is heard playing a wild dance on the piano.)

Mrs. Elfsted. Oh—what is that?

Tesman (goes to the curtains). But, Hedda dear—don’t play dance-music. Just think of Aunt Rina——

Hedda (in the inner room). And Aunt Julia. Yes, you’re right. But after this, I will be quiet.

Tesman. It’s not good for her to see us at this distressing work. You shall take the empty room at Aunt Julia’s, Mrs. Elfsted, and then I will come in the evenings and we can work there.

Mrs. Elfsted. Yes, let us do that.

Hedda (calls from the inner room). I hear what you are saying, Tesman. But how am I to get through the evenings?
Tesman (at the writing-table). Oh, I daresay Judge Brack will be so kind as to look in now and then.

Brack (calls loudly). Every blessed evening, with all the pleasure in life, Mrs. Hedda. We shall get on capitably together, we two.

Hedda (is heard to say). Thanks for your kindness, Judge.

(A shot is heard in the inner room. Tesman, Mrs. Elfsted and Brack leap to their feet. Tesman throws back the curtains. Hedda lies on the sofa, lifeless. Screams and cries. Berta appears from the right in the inner room.)

Tesman (shrieks). Shot herself! Shot herself in the temple!

Brack (half-fainting in the armchair by the stove). Good God!—people don't do such things!
THE MASTER BUILDER
A PLAY IN THREE ACTS
BY
HENRIK IBSEN
1892
FROM THE FIRST ACT

SOLNESS. Well then. I daresay you know that I took Knut Brovik and his son into my employment. About seven or eight years ago. When the old man’s business had gone to the dogs.

DR. HERDAL. Yes, so I have understood.

SOLNESS. They are really clever fellows, these two. That is, when they are not working on their own account. But then, a couple of years ago or more, the son took it into his head to get engaged, and the next thing, of course, was that he wanted to begin to build on his own account. That is always the way with these young people.

DR. HERDAL (laughing). Yes, they have a bad habit of wanting to marry.

SOLNESS. Just so. Of course that did not suit my plans. H’m—for I needed them for calculating bearing-strains and cubic contents—and all that sort of devilry, you know.

DR. HERDAL. Oh yes, no doubt that’s indispensable.

SOLNESS. Yes, it is. But Alfred was absolutely bent on setting to work for himself. No matter what increase of salary I offered him, it was no use.

DR. HERDAL. Oh no, when young fellows get those ideas into their heads——

SOLNESS. But one day this girl came to see them on some errand or other. And when I saw how utterly infatuated they were with each other, the thought occurred to me: if I could only get her into my employment, then perhaps he would stay too.
Dr. Herdal. That was not at all a bad idea.

Solness. Yes, but I did not say a word to her on that subject. Only talked to her a little, in a friendly way, about one thing and another. And she did not know me then. Nor I her either——

Dr. Herdal. Well?

Solness. Well then, the next day, pretty late in the evening, when the other two had gone home, she came here again, and began to talk as if I had made an arrangement with her. About the very thing I had fixed my mind on, but hadn’t said a single word about.

Dr. Herdal. That was most extraordinary.

Solness. Yes, was it not? She wanted to know what she would have to do—whether she could begin the next day—and so forth.

Dr. Herdal. Don’t you think she did it in order to be with her sweetheart?

Solness. That was what occurred to me at first. But no, that was not it. She seemed to drift quite away from him, when she came here to me.

Dr. Herdal. She drifted over to you, then?

Solness. Yes, entirely. Cannot take her eyes off me. Feels it, when I look at her. Trembles and shakes the moment I come near her. What do you think of that?

Dr. Herdal. H’m—that’s not very hard to explain.

Solness. Well, but what about the other thing? That she believed I had said to her what I had only wished and willed—silently?

Dr. Herdal. Yes, that is most extraordinary.

Solness. Can you explain that, Doctor?

Dr. Herdal. No, I won’t undertake to do that.

Solness. I felt sure you would not; and so I have never cared to talk about it till now. But it’s a cursed nuisance to me in the long run, you understand. Here have I got to go on day after day pretending—. But I cannot do anything else. For if she runs away from me—then Alfred will be off too.

FROM THE SECOND ACT

SOLNESS. Yes, thanks to the fire. For then I got money in my hands to build with. To build after my own heart, you understand.

HILDA. For yourself, then?

SOLNESS. No, not at once. But I laid out the big garden in villa lots, and built four or five houses there—. To begin with, you see.

HILDA (ardently). Yes, yes, that was very sensible of you. For then the stupid people could see what they were like.

SOLNESS. Yes, they could. And so I came to the front with a rush. Every one who was at all able to, would have a house from me. Since that time I have raised building after building round the outskirts of the town. And far down the fiord too. And right up in the country. And now at last they have begun to talk of me abroad—(Breaking off.) Well, who knows—who knows—?

SOLNESS (with a slight smile). After all, why shouldn't one play a little with the impossible?

HILDA (with animation). Yes, indeed, that I can understand very well.

SOLNESS. For, you see, there are some people who are always expecting to win in the lottery. Even when they never have a ticket.
HILDA (looking serious). Oh yes, there must be such trolls in the world, too.

SOLNESS. Why trolls?

HILDA. What would you call it, then?

SOLNESS (confidentially). Don't you agree with me, Hilda, that there are certain people who have the power and faculty of desiring a thing, craving for a thing, willing a thing—so persistently and so—so inexorably—that at last it has to happen?

HILDA. Of its own accord?

SOLNESS. Yes. Don't you believe that?

HILDA. No, I certainly don't. I think that, if you want to carry anything through, you have got to put your hand to it yourself.

SOLNESS. Pure imagination. It is not one's self alone that does it.

SOLNESS. Why did you not write to me now and then?

HILDA. Oh, because it was so thrilling, not to know when you would come.

SOLNESS. Then you were sure I should come?

HILDA. I expected it every single day, from early in the morning. It was so gloriously thrilling.—But we were going to write on the drawings, Mr. Solness.

MRS. SOLNESS. Oh—I can see what I can see, Halvard.

SOLNESS. Well, after this we shall have nothing more to do with these people. And that is a good thing.
Mrs. Solness. Are you really dismissing them?
Solness. Yes.
Mrs. Solness. Her as well?
Solness. Was not that what you wished?
Mrs. Solness. But how can you get on without her—? (stops and throws a glance at Hilda.) Oh, perhaps you have another one in reserve, Halvard?
Solness. But, my dear, good Aline—!
Hilda (playfully). No, indeed, Mrs. Solness. You needn’t be afraid of me. I am not the person to stand at that desk.
Mrs. Solness. But Halvard must have somebody with him—.
Solness (changing the subject). Never mind, never mind—don’t let us think about it. It will be all right, Aline. Now all we have to do is to think about moving into our new home—as quickly as we can. This evening we will hang up the wreath—(Turns to Hilda.)—right on the very pinnacle of the tower. What do you say to that Miss Hilda?
Hilda (looks at him with sparkling eyes). It will be splendid to see you so high up once more.
Solness. Me!
Mrs. Solness. For Heaven’s sake, Miss Wangel—don’t imagine such a thing. When my husband always gets so dizzy.
Hilda. He get dizzy!
Solness (vehemently). I don’t get dizzy! It is only your imagination! I don’t!
Mrs. Solness. Oh, how can you say so, Halvard? Why, you can’t even bear to go out on the second storey balcony here.
Solness. You are wrong, I tell you——
FROM IBSEN'S WORKSHOP

Mrs. Solness. Oh, but you always have been so, dear. Why will you never admit it?

Solness. You are wrong, Aline. Perhaps you will see that this evening.

Mrs. Solness. No, please God I shall never see that. I will write to the doctor—and I am sure he won't let you do it.

Solness. Why, Aline—!

Mrs. Solness. Oh, but you're ill, Halvard! Oh God—Oh God! (She goes out to the right.)

FROM THE THIRD ACT

Hilda. All these ten years I have stayed at home, believing in you. Simply believing in you. And every day I have seen you in my thoughts, free and high up.

Solness. Oh, Hilda, it is not every day that one can be so.

Hilda (imploringly). Just once more, Mr. Solness.

Solness. I cannot. Have I not told you that what I did then was the impossible?

Hilda. Well then, do the impossible once again!

Solness. Such a thing can never be done again.

Hilda. You can do it.

Solness (looking at her). How have you become what you are, Hilda?

Hilda. How have you made me what I am?

[Well how?

By willing and daring the impossible.]

Solness. The princess shall have her castle.

Hilda [jubilant, clapping her hands). Oh, Mr. Solness——!
Solness. Her castle in the air the princess shall have. [The one with a firm foundation.]

If I ever try it, H., I will stand up there and say to him: Hear me, Mighty Lord, thou may'st judge me as thou wilt. But hereafter I will build nothing but the loveliest thing in the world. Build it for a princess, whom I love. H. You would say that! S. Yes. And then I will say to him: Now I shall go down and throw my arms round her and kiss her. H. Many times. S. Many, many times. H. And then—. S. Then I would wave my hat and come down and do as I said to him. H. Do the impossible once again!

Now I see you again as I did when there was song in the air.]
LITTLE EYOLF
CHARACTERS

Harald Borgheim.
Johanne, his wife.
Rita, his sister.
Alfred, his son, eleven years old.
Eivind Almer, a road engineer.
Miss Varg, Johanne’s aunt.

(The action takes place on Borgheim’s property, on the fiord.)

FROM THE FIRST ACT

Well, but that can only be good for him.

Rita. Do you really think so?

Mrs. Skioldheim. I don’t think one way or the other. Hakon himself is the best judge of such things.

(Hakon Skioldheim enters by the door on the left, leading little Alfred by the hand. He has a slim, slight figure and a serious expression. Thin dark hair and beard. Alfred is undersized, and looks somewhat delicate.)

Hakon Skioldheim. Well, have you come, Rita?

Rita. Yes, I felt I must—. Welcome home again.

Skioldheim. Thank you.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Doesn’t he look well?

Rita. Splendid! Quite splendid! His eyes are so much brighter! And I suppose you have done a great deal of writing on your travels? I shouldn’t wonder if you had finished the whole book, Hakon [Alfred]?

Skioldheim [Alf]. The book—-?
RITA [A]. Yes, I was sure you would find it go so easily when once you got away.

SKIOLDHEIM. The truth is, I have not written a line of the book.

RITA. Not a line——?

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM. Oho! I wondered when I found all the paper lying untouched in your bag.

RITA. But, dear me, what have you been doing for these two months [all this time]?

SKIOLDHEIM (smiling). Only thinking, thinking, thinking.

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM (putting her arm round his neck). And thinking a little, too, of those you had left at home?

SKIOLDHEIM. Yes, you may be sure of that. I have thought a great deal of you.

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM. Oh, how nice of you.

RITA. But you haven’t even touched the book. And yet you can look so happy. And so contented with yourself. That is not what you generally do—I mean when your work is going badly.

SKIOLDHEIM. You are right there. For I have been such a fool hitherto, Rita. All the best that is in you goes into thinking. What you put on paper is worth very little.

RITA. Worth very little!

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM. Oh but, Hakon——!

ALFRED. Oh yes, Papa, what you write is worth a great deal!

SKIOLDHEIM (smiling, stroking his hair). Well, well, since you say so— But I can tell you, some one is coming after me who will do it better.

ALFRED. Who can that be? Oh, tell me!

SKIOLDHEIM. Only wait— you may be sure he will come, and let us hear of him. But next summer, when I go to the mountains again, I will take you with me, Alfred.

ALFRED. Take me!

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM. Oh fie, Hakon—are you thinking of deserting me again?

RITA (to Alfred). Would you not like to go with him, little boy?

ALFRED (considering). Oh, yes—I think I should.
If it is not very dangerous——

SKIOLDHEIM. Dangerous? How do you mean?

ALFRED. Well, might I not easily fall and be crippled?

SKIOLDHEIM (decisively). You must and shall come with me to the mountains, my boy.

RITA. And then you must ask your father to let you learn to shoot, and hunt, and swim—and all that sort of thing. Would you not like that, Alfred?

ALFRED. Yes, I should like that very much.—Well
—I should only have to be rather careful——

SKIOLDHEIM. Yes, you would have to be, of course.
But now you can run down into the garden and amuse yourself.

ALFRED. Shall I not take some books with me?

SKIOLDHEIM. No, no, no books.

ALFRED. Well then, I'll just go down and amuse myself.

(He is going out on to the veranda, but stops and comes back.)

ALFRED. Oh, no—I dare not!

SKIOLDHEIM. Why daren't you?

ALFRED. Because Aunt Ellen is coming that way!

SKIOLDHEIM. Are you so afraid of her too?

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM. What can she want here?

ALFRED. Papa, do you think it is true that she is a were-wolf at night?
Skioldheim. Oh, not at all. What put that into your head?

Alfred. I don’t know, but that’s what I think.

Skioldheim. She has had a lot of trouble. And it has made her rather strange. That is all.

(Miss Varg comes up the steps on to the veranda. She is old and grey-haired. A thin little shrunken figure. Old-fashioned flowered gown. Black hood and cloak. She has in her hand a large red umbrella, and carries a black bag over her arm.)

Miss Varg. Good morning, good morning to you all! It is long since I set foot here.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Yes, it is a long time. Won’t you sit down and rest a little?

Miss Varg. Yes, indeed! Thanks! (Seats herself on a chair by the sofa). I have been out at my work. And must go out again. And it takes your strength out of you.

Skioldheim. So you have been out this morning——?

Miss Varg. Yes, over on Grono. (Laughing to herself:) The people sent for me last night, to be sure. They didn’t like it a bit. But at last they had to bite the sour apple—. (Looks at Alfred, and nods.) The sour apple, my boy. The sour apple.

Alfred (involuntarily, timidly). Why did they have to——?

Miss Varg. What?

Alfred. To bite it?

Miss Varg. Why, because they couldn’t keep body and soul together.

Alfred (turns a doubtful and questioning look upon his father).

Skioldheim. Why could they not keep body and soul together?
Miss Varg. Because of the rats and mice, of course.
Alfred. The rats and—!
Mrs. Skioldheim. Ugh! Poor people! Have they so many of them?
Miss Varg (laughing). Yes, it was all alive and swarming with them. Both indoors and out. They came creepy-crawly up into the beds all night long. They plumped into the milk-cans, and they went pattering all over the floor, backwards and forwards. But then I came.
Alfred. How can any one dare [I could never dare] go there—! [I shall never go there, Auntie.]
Miss Varg. I dare. And then I took them with me—every one. The sweet little creatures! I made an end of every one of them.
Alfred (with a shriek). Papa—look! look!
Skioldheim. What is it?
Mrs. Skioldheim. Good heavens, Alfred!
Alfred. There's something wriggling in the bag!
Mrs. Skioldheim (shrieks). Ugh!
Miss Varg (laughing). Oh, you needn't be afraid of such a little thing.
Skioldheim. But what is it?
Miss Varg (loosening the string of the bag). Why, it's only little Mopséman. Come out, my little friend!
(A little dog with a broad black snout pokes its head out of the bag.)
Miss Varg (to Alfred). Come a little nearer. He won't bite. Come along!
Alfred. No, I dare not.
Miss Varg (stroking the dog). Don't you think he has a gentle, friendly countenance, my young master?
Alfred [(pointing)]. That thing there?
Miss Varg. Yes, this thing here.
Alfred [(staring fixedly at the dog)] (almost under his breath). I think he has the horriblest—countenance I ever saw.

Miss Varg (closing the bag). Oh, it will come—it will come, right enough.

Alfred [(drawing nearer.] involuntarily strokes the bag). But he is lovely—lovely all the same.

Miss Varg (in a tone of caution). But now he is so tired, so utterly tired out, poor thing. For it takes the strength out of you,—that sort of work.

Skioldheim. What sort of work?

Miss Varg. Luring.

Skioldheim. Then is it the dog that lures the rats?

Miss Varg. Mopsëman and I. I slip a string through his collar, and then I lead him three times round the house [,and play on my Pan’s pipes]. And then they have to come out of their hiding-places—every one of them. [All the blessed little creatures.] Whether they like it or not.

Alfred. And then does he bite them?

Miss Varg. Oh, not at all. No, we go down to the boat, he and I do—and then they follow after us [,—both the big ones and the little children].

Alfred (eagerly). And what then——?

Miss Varg. Then I take my seat in the stern. [And play on my Pan’s pipes.] And Trond pushes out from the land. And Mopsëman swims behind. And I hold him by the string. And all the rats and all the mice, they follow [and follow] us. Ay, for they have to.

Alfred. Why do they have to?

Miss Varg. Just because they want not to. [Because they are so deadly afraid of the water—that is why they have got to plunge into it.]

Alfred. Are they drowned, then?
MISS VARG. Every blessed one. [And then they are at peace, the lovely little things. Down there they sleep sweetly and securely.] (She rises.) In the old days, I can tell you—I didn’t need any Mopsëman. For then I did the luring myself—in another way.

ALFRED. And what did you lure then?

MISS VARG. Men. One most of all. One in particular.

ALFRED (eagerly). Oh, who was that one? Tell me!

MISS VARG (laughing). It was my own sweetheart, it was [, little heart-breaker].

ALFRED. And why did you lure him?

MISS VARG. Because he had gone away from me [I loved him so dearly]. Far, far away over the salt sea waves. But I drew him and drew him home to me again. I almost had him.—But then my grasp failed. He was gone—for ever.

ALFRED. Well, where is he now, then?

MISS VARG. Down where all the rats are.—But now I must really be off and get to business again. Have you any use for me here? I could finish it all off while I am about it.

MRS. SKIOLDHEIM. No, thank you, Miss Varg—I don’t think we require anything.

MISS VARG. Well, well, you can never tell—. If there should be anything, just send for Aunt Ellen. (Laughs.) Isn’t it strange that everybody calls me Aunt Ellen? And yet I have no living kinsfolk—neither in heaven or earth. Well, good-bye, good-bye to you all.

(She goes out by the door on the right. Shortly afterwards, ALFRED slips cautiously and unnoticed out into the garden.)

RITA. To-day she was almost horrible.
Mrs. Skioldheim. I think she is so always.

Skioldheim. I can very well understand the sort of spellbound fascination that she talked about. Nature among the glaciers and the great waste places has something of the same magic about it.

Rita (looks attentively at him). [What is it that has happened to you—] Something seems almost to have transformed you, Hakon.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Yes, don’t you think so too?

Skioldheim. Something has happened, that has transformed me. It has happened within me. For in external reality I have had no adventure on my journey.

Mrs. Skioldheim (seats herself on the sofa). You must tell us all about it.

Skioldheim. Yes, let us sit down, too, Rita—then I will try.

(He seats himself on the sofa at his wife’s side. Rita on a chair by the table.)

Skioldheim (after a brief pause). The journey has really made me so happy and light-hearted. But there has been a tinge of melancholy with it, that I cannot shake off.

Mrs. Skioldheim. That must be because you have not been able to work——

Skioldheim (smiles, rather sadly). Yes, you know me. You know that hitherto it has been so with me.

Mrs. Skioldheim (smiles). Very cross and fretful. Quite out of humour when there was now and then a difficulty with your writing.

Skioldheim. Well, you see, my dear Andrea—I have now got over those vexations.

Mrs. Skioldheim. While you were in the mountains?
Skioldheim. Yes, up in the great solitude.—Well I can’t say I have not been a happy man hitherto. But I have lived my life far too much in the study. Without cares, without troubles of any kind. Abundance on every side.—(Giving them his hands.) And then you two to flatter me and spoil me.

Rita. All we have done is to understand you, Hakon.

Mrs. Skioldheim. We have believed in you. And tried to go with you.

Skioldheim. When I look back—. Book after book I have sent out into the world. They were well done, I believe. And they have been well received too. And now the masterpiece was to come out. The work on the spiritual [psychological] doctrine of life——

Mrs. Skioldheim. Yes, but it will come out—it will come out, Hakon. Now that you are at home again——

Skioldheim. It will never come out, dear—. Must never come out.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Good heavens, but why not?
Skioldheim. Because there is a fundamental defect in it.

Rita. A fundamental defect? But can you not remedy it?

Skioldheim. No, it is irreparable, Rita.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Yes, but now that you have discovered it——

Rita. But what can this fundamental defect be?
Skioldheim. I have not taken renunciation into account.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Renunciation?
Skioldheim. Renunciation, yes. Self-denial. The desire—the joy of self-sacrifice. All that should be the inmost core of one’s conduct.
Rita. Well, but why not include all this now?

Skioldheim (shakes his head). It shall not be put into any book. What I have learnt to see—shall be made part of my own life's conduct.

Mrs. Skioldheim. What do you mean by that?

Skioldheim. You see—every family—that has breeding, be it observed—has its ascending series of generations: it rises from father to son, until it reaches the highest point the family is capable of attaining. And then it goes down again.

Rita. You are destined to attain the highest, Hakon.

Skioldheim. My belief in that has been the great delusion of my life.

Mrs. Skioldheim. You don't believe it any longer!

Skioldheim. No. Now I know that it is not so. I have usurped a throne. Now I resign it. I abdicate—

Mrs. Skioldheim. In whose favour should you abdicate?

Skioldheim. In favour of the rightful one.

Mrs. Skioldheim. Yes, but who, who, in Heaven's name, is the rightful one?

Skioldheim. Alfred [Eivind].

Rita. Alfred [Eivind]!

Mrs. Skioldheim [Mrs. Almer]. Alfred [Eivind]! Do you think that?

Skioldheim [Almer]. I see it. He will be the summit and crown of the Skioldheim stock.

Mrs. Almer. Ah, do you believe that, Alfred?

Almer. I believe it confidently. I will devote all my powers to it. I will be his teacher—

Mrs. Almer. Oh, but why burden your life so? We have no need of that.
Allmer. It is not any technical knowledge that I want to cram him with. It is the art of life itself that I will try to make him understand. Make the art of life his very nature.

Mrs. Allmer. But, Alfred, what is the 'art of life'? There is no art in living, I should think.

Allmer. Don't you think so?

Mrs. Allmer. No, it is the simplest thing in the world. Living! When one has enough to live on, as we have. And when one can live exactly as one pleases. And need do nothing but what one thinks right and proper.

Allmer. Yes, you have a bright and happy disposition, Andrea.

Mrs. Allmer. You ought to cultivate the same.

Allmer. It will come to me through the fulfilment of my duty.

Mrs. Allmer. What duty?

Allmer. My highest duty. The duty of making every side of Eivind's individuality attain its highest, fullest development.

Mrs. Allmer. Do you hold that to be your highest duty?

Allmer. Yes, for a father there is none higher.

Mrs. Allmer. Nor for a mother either, I suppose?

Allmer. No, that is understood. If I say I, it is only an instance, a relic, of my old egoism. Such things are not so easy to tear up by the roots. I mean, of course, we. We two in fellowship, Andrea.

Mrs. Allmer. No, my dearest Alfred, I really cannot be altogether with you in this.

Allmer. You cannot devote your existence to perfecting our child! As far as we are able.

Mrs. Allmer. Oh, you talk about existence. Existence—that is life—one’s sense of happiness, I think it might be called.

Allmer (seriously, almost severely). I know of no deeper sense of happiness than that of seeing Eivind grow under my hands.

Mrs. Allmer. But you used only to occupy yourself with him in such a very desultory way.

Allmer. I am sorry to say you are right there. I have been too much taken up by myself and by—

Mrs. Allmer. —and by—?

Allmer. —by all these morbid, distorted, baseless fancies that I, myself, had some special mission in the world. Something of extreme importance and moment—something that concerned myself alone.

Mrs. Allmer. Is this all that has occupied you? Occupied your life, Alfred?

Allmer. Yes.

Mrs. Allmer. Nothing else at all?

Allmer. Nothing worth mentioning, as far as I can see.

Mrs. Allmer. No person either? No other person?

Allmer. Other person? What do you mean? Who should that be?

Mrs. Allmer. Myself, I suppose.

Allmer. Oh, you, yes. But, my dearest Andrea, that is a matter of course—

Mrs. Allmer. No, no, no! I won’t hear of anything that is a matter of course. I will have it to be because I am myself. And because you are yourself.

Allmer. But, dearest Andrea, that’s just as it was in the days of our honeymoon—

Mrs. Allmer. Yes, and so it must continue.

Allmer. No, but look here—we must begin to be reasonable some day.
Mrs. Allmer. Never in this world will you get me to be reasonable. Not on this point. This talk about being reasonable—it is nothing but excuses—when one doesn’t care any more.

Allmer. No, but listen to me——

Mrs. Allmer. I have one thing to say to you, Alfred
—I will not consent to give up my place—the first place in your heart. Not even for my own little boy.

Rita. Alfred must always have some one to devote himself to. He has always been so. Towards me too.
As early as I can remember.

Mrs. Allmer. Is it only this that has put you in such wild spirits to-day?

Borgheim. Yes, and all the brightness and hopefulness [bright and hopeful prospects] that is being showered upon me [that are opening out before me].

Mrs. Allmer. Is there still something more?

Borgheim. Yes, there is! There is—. No, I can’t keep it in any longer. (Turns to Rita.) Shall we——?

Rita (quickly and softly). No, no—! Oh, take a little walk in the garden, you mean?

Borgheim. Walk—? Yes, that is just what I meant.

Rita. Yes, I should like to.

Allmer. And [while you are there] you can see what Eivind is doing. He is playing down there.

Borgheim. Oh, then Eivind has begun to play now? He used always to be sitting over his books.

Allmer. There is to be an end of that now. I am going to make a regular open-air boy of him.

Borgheim. Ah, now, that’s right! Out into the open air with him. Good Lord, what can we possibly do better than play in this blessed world? For my part, I think all life is one long playtime!

(He and Rita go out on the veranda and down through the garden.)

Allmer (looking after them). Is there anything between those two?

Mrs. Allmer. I am beginning almost to think so. Would it displease you if there were?

Allmer. It would not exactly displease me. But of course, I am in a way responsible for Rita. And it is always a precarious thing when two people form an attachment of this sort.

Mrs. Allmer (looking at him). You mean that it does not last?

Allmer. One can never tell. Even those who engage themselves cannot tell that.

Mrs. Allmer. For my part, I don't think at all ill of Borgheim.

Allmer. No, dear—ill? Who is saying anything of the sort? But I am so afraid that those two have no right to undergo transformation together.

Mrs. Allmer. Transformation? Must they do that?

Allmer. Or develop—if you prefer it. Mature. Grow. You must remember that in married life new situations are formed. Little by little, you understand. New duties assert themselves. The children, too, claim their rights. They have the first claim, Andrea.

Mrs. Allmer (close to him, almost wildly). Do you say that! The first. Do you say that, Alfred!

Allmer. Yes, for that is how I have come to look at things.

Mrs. Allmer. Then you don't love me any more?

Allmer. Andrea, how can you say such a thing? For it is impossible that you can mean it!
Mrs. Allmer. Oh yes, I am not far from meaning it now. You are no longer the same to me as you used to be. Not as you were the first year.

Allmer. Never have you been dearer to me than you are now, Andrea.

Mrs. Allmer. But not in the same way. You have begun to divide yourself between me and your work. And I will not endure that. I want you entirely to myself. (Throwing her arms round his neck.) Oh, Alfred, Alfred, I cannot give you up!

(Engineer Borgheim and Rita come up from the garden.)

Borgheim. There! Hurrah! Now I have permission to tell the news!

Mrs. Allmers. It is scarcely necessary, is it, dear Mr. Borgheim?

Borgheim. Ah? Is it not? Have you really been able to notice anything in us?

Mrs. Allmers. Oh yes, indeed.

Borgheim. Well, now she has surrendered. To me—unconditionally. She hesitates no longer——

Mrs. Allmers. Then she did before?

Borgheim. I can't say she did not.

Allmers. I hope this may mean happiness to you, dear Rita.

Rita (kissing his hand). Thanks, thanks for all you have been to me.

Allmers. Rita! My little Rita!

Borgheim. And now she is going with me. To share my work. We may have mountain passes enough to overcome. And abrupt precipices that might make one dizzy.
ALLMERS. Oh, if you but keep together in sympathy—all will be well.

MRS. ALLMERS. And let no evil eye [come between you] and take him from you, Rita.

RITA. Evil eye?

SECOND ACT

A little, open place by the side of the fiord, on Allmer's property. Mostly fir-trees, but with birches among them. A bench, a round table, and one or two chairs, all made of tree-trunks and boughs with the bark on, are set up on the right. Some large boulders lie on the beach and out in the water. It is about noon, on a sunny day. The fiord lies as still as a mirror.

(Alfred Allmers, in his grey summer clothes, but with a mourning band on the arm, sits on the bench, resting his arms on the table. His grey felt hat, also with a mourning band, lies on one of the chairs. He sits still for a while, and gazes absentilly out over the water. Then Miss Andrea Allmers, dressed entirely in mourning, comes down a little wooded hill on the left, and goes quietly up to him.)

MISS ANDREA. Are you sitting down here, Alfred?

ALLMERS (nods slowly without answering).

(Andrea moves his hat to the table and sits down on the chair.)

ANDREA. I have been searching for you such a long time. Have you been sitting here all the time?

ANDREA. Oh, but it is not at all certain that it happened so—-
Allmers. Yes, it is. I am sure of it. It must have happened so. The people down below—they say that Miss Warg rowed out. She sat in the stern of the boat and the dog swam behind on a string——

Andrea. Yes, yes, but all the same—that doesn't——

Allmers. And, you know, there are some who saw Eyolf standing at the end of the steamboat pier. A moment later he was gone. No one saw any more of him——

Andrea. Yes, they say so, I know, but——

Allmers. She has drawn him down, Andrea—there is no doubt about it.

Andrea. But, Alfred, why should she do it?

Allmers. Yes, that is just the question. Why should she—? —Eyolf certainly never did her any harm. He never called names after her; he never threw stones at her dog. Why, he had never seen her till yesterday. Nor would it be like Eyolf to do such things. So meaningless. So utterly meaningless. And yet the order of the world requires it.

Andrea. Have you spoken to Rita of this?

Allmers. I feel as if I can talk better to you about it.

Andrea. Alfred, you should talk to Rita too.

Allmers. I will do so. Both to you and to her.—But now you will soon be leaving us.

Andrea. That will not make a separation between you and me, I hope.

Allmers. No, I don't think I could imagine such a thing.

Andrea. We shall still be near to each other, however far away I may go.

Allmers. But it will be lonely for Rita and me. When you go away from us too.

Andrea. I believe Rita would rather have it so.
Allmers (looking at her). She would rather——?
Andrea. She would rather have you entirely to herself.

Allmers. Have you noticed that?
Andrea. Yes, now and then.
Allmers. But I don't think that applies to you, Andrea.

Andrea. No, perhaps not so much to me as to others.
Allmers. For she knows, of course, what we two have been to each other all our days.

Andrea. Oh, Alfred—say rather, what you have been to me. You have been everything to me. No sacrifice has been too great for you.

Allmers. Oh, nonsense, sacrifice. Oh, I have loved you so, ever since you were a little child. And then it seemed to me that I had so much injustice to make up for.

Allmers. You were generally away from home at that time. For I am thinking more particularly of the years when you were at the University.

Allmers. Yes, but, dearest Andrea—I was often at home on visits.

Andrea. But all the same——

Allmers. You have never hinted at such a thing before now. I thought the fault must be all on father's side. If there was any fault.

Andrea. Oh, I don't think the fault is ever entirely on one side——

Allmers. You may be right there. But tell me——

Andrea. Oh, please, Alfred—say no more about this! (Looks into the wood on the right.) Here come Rita and Bergheim.

Allmers. Shall we go and meet them?
Andrea. They can see us. They are coming this way.

Allmers. Have you loved Bergheim long?

Andrea (with a rapid glance at him). Loved him?

Allmers. Yes?

Andrea. I have only known him such a short time.

Allmers. And now you are going away with him. So far, far away. I never thought that we two should be parted.

Andrea. Nor I either.

Allmers (looking before him). Where is Eyolf now? Can anyone tell me that? No one in all the world. I know only that he is gone from me. And soon you will be gone from me too, Andrea. No one, no one of my own kin.

Andrea. You have Rita.

Allmers. Rita is no kin to me—it isn’t like having a sister—

Andrea (eagerly). Do you say that, Alfred?

Allmers. Yes. The Allmers family is a thing apart. We have always had vowels for our initials. And we have all the same colour of eyes.

Andrea. I too, do you think?

Allmers. No, that’s true. Not you. You are not like father. You take more after your mother. But all the same—

Andrea. All the same—?

Allmers. Living together, I believe, has stamped us alike—formed us in each other’s image. Mentally and outwardly.

Andrea. Do you feel it so, Alfred?

Allmers. Yes, that is just how I feel it.

Andrea. Then you force me to tell you——

Allmers. What? What is it? Tell me!
ANDREA (looking out to the right). Presently. Here they are coming.

(MRS. RITA ALLMERS and Engineer BORGHEIM come forward through the trees.)

ALLMERS. Yes, do so.

BORGHEIM (to ANDREA). Andrea—shall we go a little way along the road meanwhile?

ANDREA. With pleasure.

(She and BORGHEIM go off along the shore to the left.)

(ALLMERS wanders about for a little; then he seats himself on the bench on the left. RITA goes over to him.)

MRS. ALLMERS. Can you think the thought, Alfred—that we have lost him!

ALLMERS. We must accustom ourselves to think it.

MRS. ALLMERS. I cannot. I cannot. But is it so certain that he is gone—for ever?

ALLMERS. But people say they saw him lying down on the bottom. And then the current came and carried him away.

MRS. ALLMERS. Yes, yes, I know that. But it is not that I mean.

ALLMERS. What then?

MRS. ALLMERS. He seems to be about me just the same. More, a thousand times more than before.

ALLMERS (bitterly.) He seems so now?

MRS. ALLMERS. Yes, yes. But that is not enough. I must see him. Hear him. Feel him——

ALLMERS. You were so well able to do without him before—for half a day at a time——

MRS. ALLMERS. Yes, for then I knew I had him all the same.
LITTLE EYOLF

Allmers (sadly). Now we have him no longer. Things have come about, as you wished——

Mrs. Allmers. What did I wish?

Allmers (looking severely at her). That little Eyolf were not here.

Mrs. Allmers. That little Eyolf should not stand between us. That was what I wished!

Allmers. Well, well, he does not stand between us any more, poor boy.

Mrs. Allmers (looking at him). Perhaps now more than ever.

Allmers. You never really and truly loved him.

Mrs. Allmers. Eyolf would never let me take him really and truly to my heart.

Allmers. Because you did not want to.

Mrs. Allmers. Oh yes, I did. I did want to. But some one stood in the way [—even from the first].

Allmers. I, do you mean? [Do you mean that I stood in the way?]

Mrs. Allmers. Oh, no—not at first.

Allmers. Who, then?

Mrs. Allmers. Andrea.

Allmers. Andrea? Can you say that, Rita?

Mrs. Allmers. Yes; Andrea took him to her heart from the time when he was quite a little child.

Allmers. If she did so, she did it in love.

Mrs. Allmers. That is just it. I cannot endure to share anything with others. Not in love.

Allmers. We two should have shared him between us in love.

Mrs. Allmers. We? The truth is you have never had any real love for the child.

Allmers (looks at her in surprise). I have not—I How can you say—how can you think such a thing!
Mrs. Allmers. No, you have not. You used to be so utterly taken up by your work.

Allmers. Yes, and I sacrificed it for Eyolf’s sake——

Mrs. Allmers. Yes, but not out of love for him.

Allmers. Why then? Tell me what you suppose!

Mrs. Allmers. You had begun to be consumed with mistrust of yourself. All the happy confidence—all the hope that you had a great task to perform, had begun to desert you. I could see that.

Allmers. Oh yes, you may be right there. But all the same——

Mrs. Allmers. Then you went away. Up into the great, free waste places. And that must have exalted your mind——

Allmers. It has. It has. Be sure of that, Andrea!

Mrs. Allmers. But not exalted it to love——

Allmers (eagerly). It was up there in the vastness and solitude that I gave up my place in life for little Eyolf’s sake.

Mrs. Allmers. But why—why did you give it up?

Allmers. Why?

Mrs. Allmers. [I will tell you.—Allmers. Well?] Because you needed something new to fill up your life. Andrea had so often talked to you of Eyolf’s great abilities, of all the possibilities there were in him—and that sort of thing——

Allmers. Yes, she took most interest in him. But it was for that reason, you think——?

Mrs. Allmers. You wanted to make a prodigy of him, Alfred. Because he was your child. But you never really loved him. Never cared for him sincerely for his own sake.

Allmers. Do you think that?
Mrs. Allmers. Yes. If I had known that you loved him sincerely, I might perhaps have been resigned to sharing you with him. Although—no, perhaps not, after all.

Allmers (looking thoughtfully at her). But if it is so, Rita, then we two have never really possessed our own child.

Mrs. Allmers. No, not in perfect love.

Allmers. And now we are sorrowing so bitterly for him.

Mrs. Allmers. Yes, isn’t it curious that we should grieve like this over a little stranger boy?

Allmers (pained). Oh, don’t call him a stranger!

Mrs. Allmers. We never won the boy, Alfred. Not I—nor you either.

Allmers (wringing his hands). And now it is too late! Too late!

Mrs. Allmers. And no consolation. No hope anywhere—in anything!

Allmers (in quiet emotion). I dreamed about him last night. I thought I saw him standing in the garden. I felt so glad. So rich. So he was not lost to us. We had him. And the terrible reality was nothing but a dream. Oh, how I thanked and blessed—

Mrs. Allmers (moaning softly). I could not. I could not [never could]!

Allmers. Not if I went there at the same time?

Mrs. Allmers. No, no! Not for all the glory of heaven!

Allmers. Not I.

Mrs. Allmers. No, you feel it so, too, don’t you—you could not either, could you?
Allmers. For here we are at home—for the present.
Mrs. Allmers. Yes, for here is [the] happiness [we can understand].

Allmers. Happiness?
Mrs. Allmers. Yes, we must find happiness again. Without happiness I cannot live.

Allmers. Where are we to find it now?
Mrs. Allmers (shaking her head). No, no, no—you are right there. We shall never find it, while we do nothing but grieve over little Eyolf. (Looks inquiringly at him.) But——?

Allmers. But——?
Mrs. Allmers (quickly, as though in terror). No, no, I dare not say it! Nor even think it.

Allmers. Yes, say it! Say it, Rita!
Rita (hesitatingly). Could we not try to——? Would it not be possible to forget him?

Allmers. Forget Eyolf!
Mrs. Allmers. Forget our grief for him, I mean.

Allmers. Can you wish it?
Mrs. Allmers. Yes, if it were possible. (With an outburst.) For I cannot bear this for ever!

Allmers. But the memory, Rita? We cannot escape that. And the memory brings remorse.

Mrs. Allmers. The memory of little Eyolf will soften with time. Oh, don’t you think so, Alfred?

Allmers. May be—some day, perhaps. But the sense of void—can that ever be deadened?

Mrs. Allmers (looking before her). No, there it is. The void—the void. Every day, every hour—it will assert itself in the smallest trifle.

Allmers. Even the empty chair at table. Even the fact that his coat is not hanging in its usual place in the hall—
Mrs. Allmers. And happiness will not grow in the void. Neither you nor I are capable of bearing this, Alfred. We must try to think of something that will bring forgetfulness.

Allmers. Oh, what could that be?

Mrs. Allmers. Could we not see what travelling would do—far away from here?

Allmers. From home? When you know you are never really well anywhere but here.

Mrs. Allmers. Well, then, let us have crowds of people about us! Keep open house! Try—something of that sort that might deaden and dull our thoughts—

Allmers. But such a life would be impossible for me—you know that. I simply could not endure it. No, rather than that, I would try to take up my work again.

Mrs. Allmers. Your work—the work that has been like a wall between us?

Allmers. It has not, Rita. You are wrong there.

Mrs. Allmers. No, I am not! But I will not consent to share you. I want you utterly and entirely as you used to be. You must give me your love again, unaltered—I will have it, I tell you.

Allmers. That love was an intoxication, and it is dead [quenched].

Mrs. Allmers. And you can say that—!

Allmers. It is dead. But in what I now feel for you there is a resurrection—

Mrs. Allmers. I don't care a bit about any resurrection—

Allmers. Rita—!

Mrs. Allmers. I am a warm-blooded being. I have not fishes' blood in my veins.—And now to be imprisoned for life! Imprisoned in grief and bereavement.
Allmers (looking thoughtfully at her). Ah, can this be properly called grief and bereavement—this that we feel?

Mrs. Allmers. What else?

Allmers. Despair.

Mrs. Allmers. Despair!

Allmers. Yes—despair. I believe that is the right name for it.

Mrs. Allmers (looking at him with anxious inquiry). Why should we——!

Allmers. Have you no inkling of the reason?

Mrs. Allmers. No. Yes. No. Tell me!

Allmers. You say it first.

Mrs. Allmers. No, you must——

Allmers. Little Eyolf was really rather in our way——

Mrs. Allmers. Oh, Alfred—how can you——!

Allmers. You were never a real mother to him. And I was never entirely a father.

Mrs. Allmers. What else then?

Allmers. It sounds so paltry when I say it.

Mrs. Allmers. I don't understand you, Alfred.

Allmers. But it is not paltry. I don't think it can be called so.

Mrs. Allmers. No, no—but what in the world——?

Allmers. You were rich and I was poor, Rita.

Mrs. Allmers (takes a step towards him). I don't believe that!

Allmers. So it came about, nevertheless.

Mrs. Allmers. Paltry, then!

Allmers. I had a sister to provide for. Remember that.

Mrs. Allmers. Then it was for her sake——!

Allmers. We were alone in the world. She and I.
I worked for her, so long as I was able. Till I was ready to drop——

Mrs. Allmers. And you can stand here and avow all this afterwards!

Allmers. It seemed to me I ought to free you of the anguish of self-reproach. Now I think you know the reason of your never being able really to love Eyolf.

Mrs. Allmers. Oh, but I have loved him.

Allmers. You always looked upon him as though an insoluble riddle lay behind.

Mrs. Allmers. You have interpreted it wrongly. I was always trembling at the prospect of his taking you away from me. (With a wild outburst.) And now you tell me yourself that I have never possessed you.

Allmers. You have! I found you and won you so entirely when Eyolf was born.

Mrs. Allmers (scornfully). Yes, I daresay. For he belonged to the family, of course. The child—and the sister! They are something apart.—Oh, how I hate—how I hate her!

(Andrea and Borgheim come forward along the path by the shore.)

Allmers. Well, here we are still, Andrea.

Andrea. And you have been talking things over. We will not disturb you.

Mrs. Allmers. No, let us all walk together. We must have company about us in future. Alfred and I cannot get on alone.

Allmers. Yes, go on, you two. I have something to say to you, Andrea!

Mrs. Allmers. Oh! Very well, will you come, Mr. Borgheim?

(Mrs. Allmers and Borgheim go up through the wood on the right.)
ANDREA. You have something to say to me, Alfred?
ALLMERS. Yes, I want to ask you something.
ANDREA. Well?
ALLMERS. Tell me, is there anything between you and Borgheim?
ANDREA. Oh, I don't know how to answer you.
ALLMERS. What? You don't know——
ANDREA. I have no right to answer.
ALLMERS. We two must remain together.
ANDREA. But we are together.
ALLMERS. Not here. I do not feel that I am at home here any longer.
ANDREA. Alfred!
ALLMERS. Rita and I cannot share the same love.
ANDREA. Oh, don't say that!
ALLMERS. Yes, yes, I see it now. And that is why I come to you.
ANDREA. Oh, but I cannot help you in this.
ALLMERS. Yes, you can. You and no one else. It is a sister I need——
ANDREA (almost in a whisper). A sister!
ALLMERS. A sister's love. Something pure! Something holy. I feel I shall grow wicked here:
ANDREA. Alfred! Alfred!
ALLMERS. Since you were a little child we have kept together. We two alone. In those days you needed me. And I did what I could for you.
ANDREA. All that I am I owe to you.
ALLMERS. Not so much to me. But to our beautiful, holy companionship.
ANDREA. Every fibre of my mind has received its stamp from you. By you. Through you.
ALLMERS. No, no. This has come about through the calm, inscrutable mystery.—
Andrea. What, Alfred?

Allmers. The mystery of the love of brother and sister. The inexplicable attraction of sister to brother and brother to sister.

Andrea. Have you felt that?

Allmers. And you too. You too, Andrea. I am certain of that.

Andrea. And now? What do you wish now?

Allmers. I wish that you and I should return to each other.

Andrea (trembling). You and I!

Allmers. In the past you needed me. Now I need you. Do not let any one come between us. Promise me to continue being a sister to me.

Andrea. I cannot, Alfred.

Allmers. You cannot!

Andrea. No, not now. Not as you now are. I can no longer be like a sister to you.

Allmers. And why can you not?

Andrea. Because I am not.

Allmers. What does that mean!

Andrea. That I have no right to bear the name of Allmers.

Allmers. Andrea!

Andrea. I have known it a long time. Now you know it too. And now we must part.

Allmers. No right to bear—! Tell me—! Ex-plain—!

Andrea. Not a word more! That is how it is.

Allmers (sadly). Oh, how unspeakably poor this makes me.

Andrea. You might be so rich—so rich, Alfred.

Allmers. I! I rich!
ANDREA. Yes, dear. For you have Rita, and you have the treasures of both sorrow and loss. (She goes up the wood-path to the right.)

ALLMERS (to himself). No sister, then.—And little Eyolf is at the mercy of the currents of the fiord.

(He goes slowly up the path.)

THIRD ACT

An elevation in Allmers's garden. At the back, a sheer cliff, with a railing along its edge. An extensive view over the fiord. A flag at half-mast, by the railing. A table, bench and garden chairs on the elevation. On the right, a summer-house. It is a late summer evening.

(Miss Asta Allmers is sitting on a bench on the left, and appears to be waiting for some one. Her hands in her lap. After a while Engineer Borgheim comes up the slope at the back.)

BORGHEIM. So I have found you at last!
ASTA. I have been sitting here waiting—
BORGHEIM. Not for me, have you?
ASTA. Yes. I have been waiting for you.
BORGHEIM (coming nearer). I may come, then?
ASTA. Yes, if you like.
BORGHEIM. And talk to you—once more?
ASTA. Yes. Or first—let me say something to you.
BORGHEIM (standing before her). Well?
ASTA. Are you going this evening?
BORGHEIM. I am going to-night. By the steamer. I must.
Asta. Yes, yes, I suppose you must. But you must understand me, Borgheim.

Borgheim. That is what I want so much to do.

Asta. Oh, if one could divide one's self! Be in two places at the same time.

Borgheim (with a subdued outburst). If you could—what would you do?

Asta. I should go with you——

Borgheim. You would——!

Asta. With you. By the steamer to-night.

Borgheim. You would do that! Then after all——!

Asta. But I cannot divide myself! I cannot let my brother go.

Borgheim. No, you have already told me that twice, Asta.

Asta. And least of all now, when he has lost little Eyolf. For think of what he has been to me all my life——

Borgheim. Yes, of course I understand that, Asta. You consider it your duty——

Asta. Oh no, it is not for that. Not because it is my duty——

Borgheim. But——?

Asta. But because I love him, as—well, as I believe only a sister can love a brother.

Borgheim. And you think that is the deepest kind of love?

Asta. Yes, I am almost sure it is. Because it is the purest—the most sacred.

Borgheim. Then what have you to say about a mother's love for her child?

Asta. I have never known much of that.

Borgheim. What of a father's then?

Asta. That I know nothing about. Do you?
BORGHEIM. Yes, both a mother's and a father's. And I believe that is what has made me so light-hearted and happy. But then——?
ASTA. Then——?
BORGHEIM. Then I must make my roads alone.
ASTA. Oh, if I could be with you. Help you——
BORGHEIM. Would you, if you could?
ASTA. Yes, that I would.
BORGHEIM. But you cannot.
ASTA. Would you be content to have only half of me, Borgheim?
BORGHEIM. No, you must be utterly and entirely mine.
ASTA. Then I cannot.

(Alfred Allmers comes up from below.)

ALLMERS (stops and looks at them). Aha, are you both here, you two!
BORGHEIM. You know that I am going to start tonight.

ALLMERS. Well, what then? Are you going alone?
BORGHEIM. Yes, I am. And I shall have to remain alone, too—hereafter.
ALLMERS. Alone. There is something terrible in being alone.
ASTA. Oh, but, Alfred, you are not!
ALLMERS. Am I not! I, who no longer have a child. —Nor a sister either.
ASTA (anxiously). Alfred, Alfred, you must not——
BORGHEIM. How can you say so? Have you not heard—your sister is not going away with me.
ALLMERS. It is all the same. Oh, Asta, I have you no longer. Not as I had before.
BORGHEIM (looking at them in astonishment). But I don't understand——
Asta. Yes, you have Alfred. Believe me—I shall always be the same to you as I have been.

Allmers. But I shall not!

Asta (shrinking back). Ah——!

Allmers. Never bind yourself, Borgheim! There may come a time when you will regret it. But then it will be too late.

Borgheim. Never in this world could I regret anything here.

Allmers. Oh, it is incredible what changes a human being can undergo.

Asta. Could not two people change together? Then they would none the less be one.

Allmers. Never rely upon that, Asta. That would be lifelong happiness.

(Mrs. Rita Allmers comes up the hill.)

Rita. Oh, are you up here too, Alfred?

(She is going again.)

Allmers. No, stay, Rita. What did you want?

Rita. Only to walk and walk. I have no rest anywhere.

Allmers. Nor I either.

Rita. And then, we cannot even walk together.

Asta. Oh, but cannot you? Try to.

Rita. That seems to be so utterly impossible now. We must each take our own way in future.

Allmers. I cannot bear the loneliness——

Rita. I see that. I know it. Feel it. Asta, you must never leave him.

Asta. I!

Borgheim. Never!

Rita. No, he must have some one to lean upon.

Asta. Oh, but you, Rita!

Rita. Not now. Something stands between us.
Allmers. It must be got rid of—if we are to live.
Rita. It will never be got rid of. You thrive in the shade. And I must have sunshine. Stay with us, Asta.
Allmers. Do you wish it?
Rita. Yes, everything for your sake. Stay with him. And if I am a hindrance, I will give way.
Allmers. You shall never give way.
Rita. I have given way once before. Made way for my own child. Must not that be right?
Allmers. Oh, but—Rita!
Rita. You shall be our child, Asta. We will take you in the place of Eyolf. For we must have a child to draw us together.

Asta (looking at him). What do you say, Alfred?
Allmers (doubtfully). I——?
Rita. You must! You must! What you need is a tranquil, warm, passionless feeling. A child or a sister.
Allmers (with a glance at Asta). Ah, a sister——
Asta. Do you wish me to remain here, Alfred?
Allmers. No, you must go.
Rita. You cannot!
Asta. I will and must go away. This very evening.
Rita. Where are you going?
Asta. At first only in to town. But afterwards——
Borgheim. Afterwards——?
Asta. Far, far from here. (Looks at Borgheim and gives him her hand.) I am going with you.
Borgheim (in radiant joy). Will you, after all!
Asta. To-morrow you shall hear everything. And then you must make your choice.
Borgheim. Oh, I care for nothing else if I have you, Asta!
Rita. Ah! That is how it is——!
Asta. Good-bye, Rita. (Throwing her arms round her neck.) And thanks for all your goodness. (Offering her hand.) Good-bye, Alfred.

Allmers (opens his arms to her). Asta——

Asta (shrinking back timidly). Good-bye—good-bye!

(To Borgheim.) Come, come. We must hurry.

(Borgheim silently presses Allmers's and Rita's hands, and follows Asta down from the hill.)

Allmers (standing at the railing and looking over the fiord). There comes the steamer. Soon they will be gone.

Rita. And we two alone.

Allmers. It must be so.

Rita. Can we bear it?

Allmers. We must.

Rita. Yes, for Asta's sake.

Allmers (looking at her). For Asta's—? What do you mean?

Rita. She could not stay here. She, too, wished to be everything to you. As I did.

Allmers. For her own sake there was no need for her to go. But——

Rita. But——?

Allmers. For mine.

Rita. Alfred! You could think—desire—something criminal! Never!

Allmers (shaking his head). Oh no, nothing criminal. But there is a secret in the family——

Rita. In your family?

Allmers. Yes. Asta and I are free in every way.

Rita. And you have concealed this from me!

Allmers. I only learnt it to-day.

Rita. From her?

Allmers. Yes.
Rita. And then she goes away.
Allmers. Yes, then she goes away.
Rita. And you did not ask her to remain——?
Allmers. It was better for us all that Asta should go.
Rita. How could you do it, Alfred? I should never have been able to do such a thing. Oh, but it is, as I was saying—the fishes' blood—. No, no—I don't mean it. It is what is great and pure in you that has gained the victory!
Allmers. Oh, it is a long way yet to the victory.
Rita. Then let us help each other.
Allmers. To find happiness again?
Rita. Not the happiness we have lost. We shall never find that again. But——
Allmers. But——?
Rita. Oh, I don't know, Alfred. But there must be something to put in its place.
Allmers. Something that would counterbalance the loss of happiness, do you mean?
Rita. Nothing that would equal happiness. But something that might make life livable.
Allmers. Then you will live your life by main force? At any price?
Rita. Yes, Alfred—I will. In spite of all! In spite of all.
Allmers (after a short silence). Rita—I wrote a few little verses this afternoon.
Rita. Could you do that?
Allmers. Yes, to-day I could. Would you like to hear them?
Rita. Yes, I should like to. Is it something about me?
Allmers. About you as well. (Seats himself on the bench.) Come and sit down, and I will read them to you. (She seats herself on a chair by the table, opposite to him. He takes a piece of paper out of his breast pocket.)

Allmers (reads).

They dwelt, these two, in so cosy a house
In autumn and winter weather.
Then came the fire—and the house was gone.
They must search the ashes together.

For down in the ashes a jewel lies hid,
Whose brightness the flames could not smother,
And search they but faithfully, he and she,
'Twill be found by one or the other.

But c'en though they find it, the gem they lost,
The enduring jewel they cherished—
She ne'er will recover her vanished peace—
Nor he the joy that has perished.

(He looks questioningly at Rita.) Did you understand that, Rita?

Rita (rises). Yes. And I understood, too, that you did not write those verses about me.

Allmers. About whom else—?

Rita. You wrote them about yourself and Asta.

Allmers. About little Eyolf in the first place—

Rita. Oh, not at all about the little Eyolf who lies out there, deep, deep down.

Allmers. Rita, Rita, how can you—

Rita. You wrote them about the other one. About her whom you used to call little Eyolf when she was a child.
ALLMERS. Both for the big one and the little one. And for you too, Rita. I had to give expression to something that I can no longer bear in silence.

RITA. Would it help you if you were free of me?

ALLMERS. No.

RITA. And we cannot live together as man and wife either.

ALLMERS. No.

RITA. For little Eyolf might see it, perhaps. Who knows? And he must not see us living in happiness without him.

ALLMERS. Nor could we do so, Rita. Even if we wished.

RITA. No, we could not. (Stops.) But if we could call him to life again, Alfred!

ALLMERS. What do you mean by that?

RITA. If we could make him live within us, I mean.

ALLMERS. Oh, he does live within us. In sorrow and heartache—and in remorse too.

RITA. Oh, sorrow and heartache and remorse—that is not life at all. They are not for Eyolf's childish soul. We must think of something that may fill him with quiet joy.

ALLMERS (shaking his head with a sad smile). As if he could see what we are about here!

RITA. Perhaps he can see, though—in his own way. We must live and act as though he were behind us. Looking at us. Seeing everything and understanding everything. All our actions and all our thoughts.

ALLMERS (wringing his hands). Oh, if he could have lived with us. Lived his own life. Now it is as though he had never existed. What was he doing here in the world, if he was not to—

RITA. He did not live in vain, nevertheless.
ALLMERS. Oh, phrases, Rita. (Pointing down over the railing.) But listen to them down below. All the shrieking, yelling children. All those who let him go to destruction. And who did not help him.

RITA. They will all go to destruction too, Alfred. Go to destruction in their unhappy homes.

ALLMERS. Yes, I daresay you are right.

RITA. And we stand up here on our height and look on. And do not help them.

ALLMERS. We——?

RITA. We could help them, if we wished. But we do not.

ALLMERS (looking before him). That would be little Eyolf's revenge. To repay death with life.

RITA. Then he would not have lived in vain.

ALLMERS. Nor died in vain either.

RITA. If you will—we will do it, Alfred. Stand by one another like two faithful friends.

ALLMERS. Little Eyolf shall continue to live through us.

(He goes to the flagstaff and hoists the flag to the top.)

RITA. No more sign of death. That is a relief, Alfred. Oh, what a relief!

ALLMERS. Thanks for rousing me to this.

RITA. Thank little Eyolf.

ALLMERS. Yes, him first.—In deeds.

RITA. If only one does not demand happiness—at any price—I do not see why one should not be able to live one's life.

ALLMERS. Eyolf's memory will teach us how to live our lives.

RITA. Yes, yes, Alfred. And he himself will live in them.
Rita. Yes, he is living with us. We will never more look for him down in the deep, dark, turbid current.

Allmers. He is not down there. He is up here on earth with us, unseen. Taking part in our daily life. Helping us to protect our uncertain, changeable human destinies.

Rita. And if now and then a mysterious Sabbath peace descends on our souls——?

Allmers. What then, Rita?

Rita. Do you not think it might be a visit from some one who is gone?

Allmers. Who knows? We will look for those who are gone. Perhaps we shall catch sight of them.

Rita. Little Eyolf. And big Eyolf. Where shall we look for them, Alfred?

Allmers. Upwards.

Rita (nods in approval). Yes, yes, upwards!

Allmers. Upwards—towards the stars. And towards the great silence.

Rita (giving him her hand). Thanks!
JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN
FROM THE FIRST ACT

Mrs. Borkman. He thinks, what is the truth, that you are ashamed of us—that you despise us. And do you pretend that you don’t? Were you not once planning to adopt him? To make him change his name? Call himself Rentheim. Erhard Rentheim.

Miss Rentheim. That was at the height of the scandal—when the case was before the courts.

Mrs. Borkman. Yes, then you wished me to lose my boy too. As I lost everything—everything else. I was only to be left with the dishonoured name. I alone. It was good enough for me to be called Borkman.

Miss Rentheim. I have no such designs now.

Mrs. Borkman. And it would not matter if you had. For in that case what would become of his mission? No, thank you. Erhard no longer needs you. And therefore he is as good as dead to you—and you to him.

Miss Rentheim (with an outburst). Can you say that, Gunhild!

Mrs. Borkman. He has promised me that. He has sworn it to me. Now you know it.

Miss Rentheim (firmly, with resolution). We shall see. For now I shall remain out here.

SECOND ACT

The great gallery on the first floor of the Borkman house. The walls are covered with faded tapestries, representing hunting-scenes, gods, shepherds and shepherdesses, all in faded colours. A folding-door to the left, and further forward a piano. In the left-hand corner, at the back, a door, cut in the tapestry, and covered with tapestry, without any frame. Against the middle of the right wall, a desk, with books and papers. Further forward on the same side, a sofa with a table and chairs in front of it. The furniture is all of a stiff Empire style. A lighted chandelier hangs from the ceiling.

(Jens Borkman stands by the piano, with a music-stand in front of him, playing the violin. Frida Foldal sits at the instrument, accompanying him.)

(Borkman is a slender man of middle height, well on in the sixties. His appearance is distinguished, his profile finely cut; he has white hair and is clean-shaven. He is in evening dress, with a black coat and a white necktie. Frida Foldal is a girl of seventeen, pretty, pale, with a somewhat weary and overstrained expression. She is cheaply dressed in dark clothes.)

(They are playing the last bars of a piece of Beethoven.)

Borkman (lowers the violin and remains standing at the music-stand.) It went passably well this evening. You are getting on, Miss Foldal.

Frida. Oh, I have had so little practice as yet, unfortunately. I am so badly wanting in proficiency.

Borkman. You have the fire of music in you. And to have fire in one’s soul—that is the decisive thing. The decisive thing in every relation of life. (Turning over the pages of the music book.) Let me see—. What shall we take next—

Frida (looks at her watch). I beg your pardon, Mr. Borkman—but I am afraid I must go.—

Borkman. Are you going already?
JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN

FrI DA (rises). I really must. I have an engagement this evening.

BoRKMAN. Are you to play for dancing?

FrI DA. Yes, there is to be a dance after supper.

BoRKMAN (places his violin and bow on the piano). Do you like playing dance music—in private circles, I mean?

FROM THE THIRD ACT

BoRKMAN. But it does not know why I did it; why I had to do it. And that is what I want to explain.

Mrs. BoRKMAN. Reasons acquit no one.

BoRKMAN. They may acquit one in one's own eyes.

Mrs. BoRKMAN. Oh, let all that alone. I have thought over that business enough and to spare.

BoRKMAN. I too. During those six years in my cell I had time to think it over. And during the eight years up there in the gallery I have had still more ample time. I have gone over the whole case again—by myself. I have turned every one of my actions upside down and inside out. Backwards and forwards. And the final judgment I have come to is this: the one person I have sinned against is—myself.

Mrs. BoRKMAN. And what about me? What about your son?

BoRKMAN. You and he are included in what I mean when I say myself.

Mrs. BoRKMAN. And what about the hundreds of others, then—the people they say you have ruined?

BoRKMAN. I had power in my hands. And these others did not concern me.

Mrs. BoRKMAN. No, no, there may be something in that.
Borkman. If the others had had the power, do you think they would not have acted exactly as I did?
Mrs. Borkman. They would not—most of them.

FROM THE FOURTH ACT

Ella Rentheim. A long sleep, I think!
Mrs. Borkman. Ella! (To The Maid.) Go for help. Men and horses.
(The Maid goes out to the right.)
Mrs. Borkman (behind the bench). The night air has killed him.
Ella Rentheim. So it appears. Will you not look at him?
Mrs. Borkman. No, no, no. He could not stand the fresh air.
Ella Rentheim (nods slowly). It must be so. The cold has killed him.
Mrs. Borkman. Oh, Ella, the cold had killed him long ago.
Ella Rentheim. Us too.
Mrs. Borkman. You are right.
Ella Rentheim. We are three dead beings—we three here.
Mrs. Borkman. We are. And now I think we two may hold out our hands to each other, Ella.
Ella Rentheim (quietly). Over the third. Yes.
(Mrs. Borkman behind the bench, and Ella Rentheim in front of it, take each other's hand.)
WHEN WE DEAD AWAKEN
NOTES AND DRAFT

The first act passes in the summer. Fashionable bathing establishment on the sea coast.
Second act up at a health resort, high in the mountains.
Third act among glaciers and precipices on the western slope.
He is a sculptor. Elderly. Famous. Newly married. Returning from honeymoon. He has taken her “up into a high mountain and shown her all the glory of the world.” And so he won her. She is young, bright and joyous. They are both radiantly happy. Now he will begin to enjoy life.
Then it is that he meets “his first love” at the bathing establishment. The one he has forgotten. She who has never forgotten. Clad in white. Accompanied by her nurse. She was of rich family. Left her home and went away with him, the young, poor, unknown future artist. Became his model. Then she broke with him and left him. Has since been married to another and divorced. Then married again. He committed suicide. All this happened abroad.

CHARACTERS

The Doctor at the Baths, an intelligent man, still young. The Inspector at the Baths. Fussy. Goes about among the visitors, spreading gossip.
The Gossiping Lady from the capital. Has the reputation among the visitors of being extremely amusing. Malicious from thoughtlessness.
Many Visitors at the Baths, with their Children.
A Waiter at the Bath Hotel.
Waitresses.
The Sportsman from the mountains.
Stubow. Rambow.
Professor Erik Stubow, famous sculptor.

SCENARIO

Stubow and Maia.
The former and the Inspector.
The former and the strange lady in white with her nurse. They go into the pavilion.
The former, the lady from the capital and other ladies. The ladies go off after a short scene.
The mountain sportsman arrives with his servant and dogs from the steamer. Servant and dogs out to the right.

Stubow, Maia, the Sportsman and the Inspector.
The Sportsman and Maia out to the right.
The strange lady in from the left.
The Inspector goes into the hotel.
The lady and Stubow alone. Dialogue.
Maia comes back. The lady off.
Stubow and Maia decide to go to the mountain health resort.
In this country only the mountains give an echo, not the men and women.

He was a diplomatist, a distinguished Russian [Bulgarian] diplomatist. Him I managed to drive out of his mind, mad, incurably mad. It was great sport while it was in the doing. I could have laughed within me. If I had anything within me.
So that was Herr von Satow.
No, my second husband was called Satow. He was a Russian.
And where is he
I have killed him.
Killed!
Killed him with a fine sharp dagger which I had with me in bed
[Don't believe you
Indeed you may believe it]
Have you never had children.
Yes, many children
And where are they now
I killed them.
Now you are telling lies, Irene. [All this.]
Killed them [murdered them pitilessly] as soon as they came into the world. [Long, long before.] One after the other.

Religious brooding?
No, I have never——
Some of the strings of your nature have broken.
Does not that always happen when a human being dies?

First became famous through Irene—Now he will live and enjoy his youth over again with another. Then he alters the statue into a group. Irene becomes a secondary figure in the work that made him famous——

First a single statue; then a group. Then she left him. Our life was not that of two human beings
What was it then
Only that of artist and model.
2nd ACT.

Children playing on the upland. Professor Rubek is sitting on the bench and looking at their play.
Maia comes to look for him. Scene between them.
Irene with a band of children advances over the upland.
The bear hunter comes and fetches Maia.
Irene and Rubek. Great scene.
Something is locked up in me
You took the key with you

When we dead awaken——
What do we see then?
We see that we have never lived.

U. Come down again as fast as you can
The mist is upon us

We will go up above the mists.
But you must pass through them first

Oh, how I shall rejoice and sing, if I get down with a whole skin

The hut by the Lake of Taunitz. There it lies
Great, white swans are dipping their necks in the water.
THE RESURRECTION DAY
A PLAY IN THREE ACTS

BY

HENRIK IBSEN

FROM THE THIRD ACT

Maia (interrupting). Was it not a strange chance that we four should meet here on the wild mountain side?

Professor Rubek. You with an eagle-shooter, and I with—(to Irene)—well, what do I come with?

Irene. With a shot eagle.

Maia. Shot?

Irene. Shot in the wing, Mrs. Rubek.

Maia. Rubek—there seems to be something good and reconciling in our meeting here for the last time.

Professor Rubek. Never to see each other again. If you wish the same as I do.

Maia. With all my heart I do.

Ulfheim. Then all is well. I would rather have carried her off—by force—violently—but let that be—

Maia. Then I will say good-bye to you, Rubek.

Professor Rubek. I have done you a great wrong.

I, too, have taken you by force——

Maia. Yes, when you bought me——

Professor Rubek (nods). —bought you, in spite of all the ferment of open-air life in you.
Maia. And if you now set me free so easily [and cheerfully], it is because you want to be free yourself.

Professor Rubek. Yes, I could not bear it any longer.

Maia. If we had not been joined together in wedlock, as it is called, you would have borne it longer.

Professor Rubek. You too! You too, Maia. You have spent days and nights regretting it.

Ulfheim. Don't think of that now. Here we meet and here we part. Here we will hold our feast.

Maia. A feast here? Where will you get the champagne from, Mr. Ulfheim?

Ulfheim. Champagne? Must there be champagne?

Maia. Nothing less will do!

Ulfheim. Then, upon my soul, you shall have it!

(He takes a key from his pocket, opens the door of the shooting hut and goes in.)

Maia (looking after him). What is he doing now?

Professor Rubek. He is making a clatter with knives and forks. And with glasses. He is preparing the feast for us.

(Ulfheim comes out, bringing a tray covered with a cloth, with bottles of wine and cold meats, and puts it down on the stone table.)

Maia. But what in the world——!

Ulfheim. You will have to take pot luck, ladies and gentlemen. This was really intended only for two. But our guests are welcome. (Ulfheim opens a bottle of champagne.) [(softly.) Lars is a good fellow. He knows me. Looks after everything.]

Maia (in a half whisper). Oh, you base criminal!

Ulfheim. No reproaching your comrade. (Pouring out the wine.) Only intended for two, as I said. We men must make shift with beer glasses. (Hands the glasses round and raises his glass.) Your health, ladies and gentlemen! (To Maia.) What shall the toast be, Madam?

Maia. Freedom shall be the toast!

(She empties her glass at one draught.)

Professor Rubek. Yes, let freedom be the toast.

(He empties his glass.)

Irene. And a toast for those who have the courage to use it.

(She sips at her glass and throws the rest on the ground.)

Ulfheim. Thanks for the toast, Madam. I take it for myself. For I have never lacked courage to use my freedom! (He drinks and fills the glasses again.) And now a toast to the hunt for the new life! I have a castle to offer her who follows me——

Maia. No castle! I won’t own it!

Ulfheim. You may want it in time. In a year or two perhaps all the rest will be done with.

Maia. Hurrah! Then we shall be altogether free.

(Empties her glass.)

Ulfheim. Then we shall only have this hut left.

Maia. We can set fire to that. Burn it down any day we like.

Ulfheim. But first live—live in it!

Maia. Live the new life, yes!

Ulf. And now we take our leave.

Prof. R. No doubt we shall meet down at the hotel.

Ulf. Scarcely. Before you come down, I shall be gone.

Prof. R. Are you going with him, Maia?

M. Yes, I am going with him.
Prof. R. And we are going further over the mountains.

Ulf. Shall we not warn him?

M. (struggling for a moment with herself). No. Let him choose his own way.

Ulfh. (raising his hat). A pleasant trip among the mountains.

(Silent leave-takings are exchanged. Ulfheim and Maia begin to descend the precipice at the back.)

Ulfh. Take care. It is a deadly dangerous way we are going.

M. (between jest and earnest). You must take the responsibility for us both.

(They continue to climb down and are no longer seen.)

Prof. R. [(with a breath of relief). Now I am free!]

So lightly and cheerfully could she leave me.

Irene. She is awakened.

Prof. R. Awakened?

Irene. From life's deep, heavy sleep. Even as she descends into the ravine, she is being carried upwards towards her bright native heights—without her knowing it.

Prof. R. To me she is dead. Then let her live [—or rest].

Irene. Did you not murder her a little every day—when you were living together?

Prof. R. I?

Irene. As you murdered me a little every day. Sucked her blood too—to support yourself——

Prof. R. Never! Against you I have sinned. But never against her. Never against any other.

Irene. Then perhaps that very thing was death to her.
Prof. R. No one else in the world concerns us. We can now be everything to each other.

Irene. Now!

Prof. R. Yes, now. Come, Irene, before we go home we will climb up on yonder peak and look far out over the country and all its glory.

Irene. Driving clouds are sweeping up the mountain side.

Prof. R. But the peak rises clear of them.

Irene. And you will go up there?

Prof. R. With you. I will live the resurrection day and reshape it in a new image—in your image, Irene.

Irene. In mine—?

Prof. R. In yours, as you now are.

Irene. And do you know what I am now?

Prof. R. Be what you please. For me, you are what I see in you.

Irene. I have stood on the turn-table [in the glare of electric lamps, amid the blaring of trumpets], naked, and made a show of myself to hundreds of men—after you.

Prof. R. It was I that drove you to the turn-table—blind as I then was—I, who placed the dead clay-image above the happiness of life—of love—not a hairsbreadth has this lowered you in my eyes.

Irene. Nor in my own. But the desire of life is dead in me. Now I have arisen, and see that life lies dead. All life lies on its bier—(The clouds sink slowly down like a damp mist.) See how the shroud is closing in on us! But I will not die again, Arnold!—Save me! Save me, if you can and will!

Prof. R. Up above the mists I have a glimpse of the mountain peak. It stands there glittering in the sunrise.
—there it is we must go—through the mists of night up into the light of morning.

(The mists close in thicker and thicker over the scene.
R. and Irene step down into the veil of mist and are gradually lost to sight.)

(The head of the Sister of Mercy appears, searching, in a rift in the mist.)

(High up above the sea of mist the mountain peak shines in the morning sun.)
